FORMER GOV. LOWDEN IS DEAD

SAGA OF MIGHTY ATLANTA TOLD BY CHICAGOAN

Ship's Story a Pean to Fighting Men.

The Chicago Tribune this morning begins publishing the story of a 23 year old Chicagoan who is a full lieutenant in the United States navy and has just returned from a 75,000 mile voyage during which his ship, the gallant cruiser U. S. S. Atlanta, was lost in the actions of last November off Guadalcanal—actions which took a terrible toll of a superior Jap fleet and put the surviving ships to rout. The story he tells is an epic of the surface ships of the United States navy and of the men who fought the battles. Because he sees the navy as what it is—a great impersonal team—he tells the story anonymously. And because it is the navy's story, payment for it is being made to the Navy Relief society.

BY AN OFFICER OF U. S. S. ATLANTA.
[Copyright: 1943: By The Chicago Tribune.]

From the gallant cruiser U. S. S. Atlanta, which was shelled, torpedoed, and sunk, I watched the night battle of Nov. 12-13 in Savo sound off Guadalcanal—the bloodiest and most destructive surface ship engagement of the war.

It was one of a series of blows that cost Japan 29 ships and probably more; that sent 30,000 to 45,000 Japanese soldiers to watery graves, and shattered Nippon's last major effort to seize control of the strategic Solomon Islands. There can be no doubt that the rout beginning there led to the recent and complete evacuation of Guadalcanal.

The exploding, sinking, and blazing Jap warships etched upon my memory is an unforgettable scene. In the air actions that preceded the Savo sound fight I saw some of the greatest anti-aircraft victories of the war. I saw Jap dive bombers and torpedo planes in numbers bursting apart in the air and plummeting into the water, sheeted in flame.

Sees Jap Plane Dive Onto Ship.

I watched a fanatical Jap pilot, his ship afire, crash-dive the blazing wreckage against the cruiser U. S. S. San Francisco, killing 16 of our men. I saw individual air combats; thrilling and inspiring battles proving the superiority of our fighting American pilots.

In eight months' cruising in the South Pacific I witnessed the opening action at Midway and saw the billowing black pall that rose from the pyre of the great old carrier Yorktown. I joined in the cheers as our torpedo planes and dive bombers returned time after time with racks empty from pounding the fleeing, battered Jap fleet during the red days of June 4, 5, and 6, 1942.

But this is not the story of one man or what he did. It rather is the story of men like the late Ensign Henry Jenks of New York, Coxswain G. A. Smith of New York, Ensign Ashley Morris of Atlanta, and Turret Capt. R. G. Jackson of Colorado, who are helping to fight our country's war on the sea fronts of the world.

A Story of Fighting Men.

It is the story of thousands of young Americans who in two years or less have ceased to live and think as civilians; who have become fighting officers and fighting men in the greatest traditions of the United States navy. It is a close hand view and an effort to understand those swift and subtle changes and the day by day experiences that have molded these young fellows into the world's greatest navy.

This account might also be called The Cruise of the U. S. S. Atlanta, since many of us were with her from her shipyard days until that day in the Solomons when she took her towering turrets and deadly guns to the bottom of Savo sound.

There are two reasons why I do not write under my own name. The first is my personal dislike of being a publicized naval officer. There are thousands of officers and enlisted men who have done the same job, seen the same fights, and have performed their duties better than have I.

Secondly, a personal or subjective description of the navy would be entirely foreign to the traditions and character of the organization itself. The navy is objective and impersonal. It has thousands of officers and en-

AIRPLANES NOW, PLEA FOR CHINA BY MME. CHIANG

After War Goal: To Regain Land.

'Warphans' to Benefit

A trust fund of $100,000 was presented to Mme. Chiang Kai-shek yesterday by Mrs. Emmons Blaine, daughter of the late Cyrus McCormick, former president of the International Harvester company. Altho use of the income from the trust was not stipulated, Mme. Chiang told Mrs. Blaine that it would provide care for the "warphans" [war orphans] of China.

The trust, which consists of 1,000 shares of preferred capital stock of the International Harvester company, was given to both Gen. and Mme. Chiang in the name of Mrs. Blaine's mother, Mrs. Nettie Fowler McCormick. Edwin H. Cassels, attorney, and Fowler McCormick, nephew of Mrs. Blaine, are named as trustees.

Mrs. Blaine, were named as trustation during a short ceremony in which she read a Chinese poem and a letter she had written to Mme. Chiang. The legal papers of the trust were presented in a blue linen case covering an elaborately embroidered red folder.

BY MARCIA WINN.

China would welcome Russia as an ally. China would welcome as allies all peoples who hold human freedom as a goal. China now wants planes. China in the post-war world wants only China.

In just such succinct, unmistakable terms Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, envoy extraordinary and wife of China's generalissimo, yesterday made clear the policies of her stricken country. She intimated, as well, that if her physicians permit it, she may carry her crusade for understanding to Russia and England.

Speaks Tomorrow Night.

The conference, Mme. Chiang's only emergence of the day from the suite at the Drake hotel where she is rallying her strength for a mass meeting at the Chicago Stadium tomorrow night, was her fourth official press conference since arriving in the United States a month ago. In it she played a winning game of leap frog with the press of the midwest.

She showed herself to be a lady of many scintillant facets: A superb diplomat, as instanced in her reply that she would be glad to meet Mr. Anthony Eden if their paths crossed; a great democrat, as shown when she gently asked a Negro reporter, who asked for a special greeting for the Negro race, if all were not Americans and as one; one contemptuous of complacency and injustice, as shown in the flashing brilliance with which she called "the Manchuria incident"; the possessor of a leaping intelligence, a high sense of humor, and an eye so alert and heart so warm that when she saw an elderly man with a cane standing, she quickly asked an aid to give him a chair.

Wears Air Force Insignia.

Led by Consul Gen. Chang-Lok Chen, she hurried into the conference smiling and blinking from photographers' flashlights. She wore a long side-slit Chinese dress of black and white print with a long sleeved black

Court Refuses Injunction in OPA Meat Suit

Declaring that the office of price administration "must realize that they haven't exclusive rights on all the patriotism in America," Federal Judge Michael L. Igoe yesterday denied the OPA a temporary injunction against a Chicago meat wholesaler charged with violating its price ceilings.

"The OPA should not use the injunction process in cases of confusion and innocent error," Judge Igoe said. He indicated he would not issue injunctions against business men who made errors in good faith while attempting to follow the OPA's regulations. The OPA has made a practice of asking injunctions to restrain dealers from violating price ceilings, thereby making them liable to action for contempt of court if the ceiling is violated.

Michael Mannebach and the M. Mannebach meat wholesaling firm, 1246 George street, were accused of overcharging customers $226.39 on 12 meat sales between Dec. 16, when the OPA price regulations went into effect, and Feb. 27.

Reports 8 Other Errors.

Defense Attorney Harry L. Rudnick said the company admitted not only the violations charged, but eight in addition, and said they were innocent errors and that the firm was trying to comply with the OPA edicts. The company did $427,299 worth of business in the period, he said, and the overcharges represented .0005 of one per cent of the gross.

Rudnick also declared that the company had voluntarily audited its accounts when advised it was suspected of the violations and had discovered that it had undercharged customers $189.02 during the same period in making similar errors.

"The question of good faith has nothing to do with this type of case," Robert B. Johnstone, OPA attorney, told the court.

"Any man has a right to come into my court and show that he is operating in good faith," Judge Igoe retorted.

Terms Situation Serious.

"This is a serious situation," Johnstone said. "There are thousands of cases like this. It is a large enforcement job and the only way OPA can handle it is to get injunctions."

Altho Johnstone admitted that the overcharges ranged only from 2 to 30 cents on each sale, he quoted the price control act of 1942 that injunctions shall be issued where violations are shown in court or where it is shown that a violation is about to occur.

Rudnick replied, quoting a Feb. 11 Circuit Court of Appeals decision that courts of equity shall not be used to punish past offenses.

The judge held Mannebach innocent of willful wrongdoing and refused the injunction.

WPB LABOR ADVISERS URGE 48 HOUR WEEK FOR STEEL INDUSTRY

Washington, D. C., March 20 [Special].—A 48 hour week thruout the steel industry instead of the existing 40 was recommended today to the war production board's steel division by a steel labor advisory committee comprising Philip Murray, president of the CIO, and six other members of the United Steel Workers of America. To date the war man power commission has established the 48 hour week only in so-called labor shortage areas.

It is understood the proposal calls for payment of time and a half after the first 40 hours, as required by existing law. Hence, the basic work week would remain at 40 hours.

The recommendation is expected to run into opposition from managements of the steel companies who, in some cases, have not favored a longer work week on this wage basis.

According to government data, the average work week in the steel industry in December was only 41½ hours. Allowing for injuries and other absences, it was said, a 48 hour industry wide work week would amount to an average of 46½ hours.

IT'S SPRING AGAIN AND CROP HOPES RISE WORLD OVER

That accurate timepiece—the sun—ticked in the first day of spring this morning at 7:03, in the event known to weather, crop, and astronomy sharps as the vernal equinox. Tho this may not be a springlike day, the spring of 1943 begins the greatest campaign of all time in this warring world—the campaign of food for the populations of 184 million in North America; of 1 billion 154 million in Asia; of 402 million in Europe.

The world's food granaries in all the lands at war approach the planting season on the northern hemisphere with fewer stores than at any time in history, statisticians agree.

To the professionals in astronomy spring arrives at the instant the earth's axis, from pole to pole, is parallel with the sun, a moment when daylight and night hours are equal at all points on the planet.

But to farmers, ranchers, gardeners, orchard tenders, stock raisers, it is the date from which planting and grazing seasons are reckoned.

Churchill on Air at 3 P. M., May Mention Invasion Plan

LONDON, March 21 [Sunday]—(AP).—Prime Minister Winston Churchill will speak to his nation and the world at 9 p. m. [3 p. m. Chicago wartime] tonight in an address expected to outline allied prospects in the coming year and which may contain hints of the promised invasion of Europe. His address, to be delivered at the beginning of the usual midevening news program that has millions of British listeners every night, will be beamed to the United States and all the allied nations.

Only a 60 Foot Church, but Its Workers' Joy

Baltimore, Md., March 20 (AP).—It's just a little church, 60 feet long and not much over 25 feet wide, but it means a lot to a sturdy group of working men, many of them employed at the Glenn L. Martin aircraft plant.

The workers are justly proud of their church. They built it themselves in their spare time. Much of the construction material came from airplane propellor packing cases donated by the Martin company.

The cornerstone of the edifice—named the Fellowship church—will be laid next Sunday.

Packing Boxes Provide the Wood.

The church proper, the walls, nave, apse, belfry, steeple, and stained glass windows came in about 100 sections from York, Pa. The building is of white asbestos shingle construction. About 2,000 feet of pine flooring and much of the scaffolding came from the packing boxes.

The church, located on Bowley's Quarter road, Middle River, has a basement with two Sunday school rooms, auditorium, and boiler rooms.

Pastor Is Ex-Worker.

The pastor, the Rev. Otto Lehman, is a former worker at Martin's. The chairman of the building committee is Daniel G. Blake, night foreman in the wood shop.

"It's funny," said Blake, "How good the Lord has been to us. Last January the earth was frozen solid when the concrete foundations had to be poured. A warn rain came and softened the ground, just when we needed it. The concrete was poured and hardened just before the next freeze."

Canners Talk of Output Cut as U. S. Hoards

New York, March 20 [Special].—Members of the food industry were advised today that a cut in 1943 canned food production was being considered seriously by canners whose warehouses still are filled with government purchases of the 1942 pack for the army and navy, lend-lease and other priority groups.

With retail channels also clogged with canned foods because high point ration values apparently have curtailed buying, spokesmen for the New York City food industry voiced no enthusiasm over Secretary of Agriculture Claude R. Wickard's announcement yesterday that the nation's farmers planned to plant 10 million more acres in food crops.

Some members of the industry could not understand what would become of this increase if canners reduced operations.

Urge Restudy of Needs.

The food administration should reexamine the government's proposed schedule of purchases from the 1943 pack as the first step toward a "businesslike" handling of the food situation, it was suggested by the American Institute of Food Distribution, Inc., research organization whose surveys are financed by more than 3,000 members, including large and small food organizations, banks, advertising agencies, canners, and other groups.

It was the institute which declared that canners whose warehouses still hold canned goods for the army from the 1942 pack were considering a production cut; that some held as much as 50 per cent of the fruits and vegetables taken by the government in 1942 and that some few canners held government purchases from the 1941 pack.

"With the government planning to take about 40 per cent of the vegetables and 60 per cent of the fruits from the 1943 pack," the institute said, "canners' alarm over lack of warehousing space can be understood. Those canners who hold substantial percentages of past government purchases will have to add 1943 government purchases to those stores and, in addition, will have to warehouse the percentage of canned goods intended for civilians."

Cite Lack of Space.

Recently the institute asserted that unwise government buying of canned goods last year had helped create civilian shortages. Now the institute states this new problem: "Canners are engaged in a seasonal occupation. Their warehouses are not intended to hold large stocks for long periods."

Meanwhile, the food distribution administration has arranged to set up stocks for provisioning ships by bringing supplies of other types of food here from other areas rather by staging sudden raids on New York warehouses. This plan is designed to relieve shortages in the city.

It was said that vessels departing in convoys for overseas areas frequently carry food supplies two or three times normal to meet emergencies. Enough food is carried to supply those aboard both going across and returning.

Meanwhile, the New York Food Merchants association, representing some 5,000 dealers, appealed to Wickard to start rationing potatoes immediately.

ASK DRAFT OFFICIALS TO SHIP SOLDIER HOME —CANNERY NEEDS HIM

Bloomington, Ill., March 20 [Special].—Joe Lutz, 23 years old, owner and operator of the Lutz Canning company in nearby Normal, now is a private in the army and presumably has little time to worry about whether his cannery, which last fall put up 57,000 cases of tomatoes, operates this year.

But the McLean county war board today appealed to state selective service officials in effect either to send Joe home on a long furlough or to provide somebody to run the cannery.

Frank R. Hubert, war board chairman, wrote Col. Harris P. Ralston, member of the state selective service board, reminding him of a conversation between them last December when selective service officials rejected a local board appeal for Lutz' deferment.

"You stated that . . . the government would see that [the plant] operated," Hubert wrote. "It is essential that this plant be in operation to produce and preserve vital food for our sons and daughters in military service."

He added that Lutz' managerial ability is essential, and that "we have found no one to replace him."

PLAN SERVICES AT HIS ILLINOIS FARM THURSDAY

Burial to Be Beside Wife in Chicago.

Tucson, Ariz., March 20 [Special].—The body of Frank Orren Lowden, governor of Illinois during the World war and Republican elder statesman, will be placed aboard the Southern Pacific's Golden State limited tomorrow afternoon for a journey to his farm home near Oregon, Ill.

Lowden, who was 82 years old last Jan. 26, died here today in a cottage on the grounds of the El Conquistador hotel. Death came at 12:30 p. m., Chicago war time, after 24 hours of unconsciousness and was attributed to the weakening effect of a recent touch of pneumonia.

Tentative arrangements call for funeral services Thursday morning in Lowden's Oregon home, Sinnissippi farm, for members of the family, tenants and Oregon friends.

Plan to Bring Body Here.

The body then will be taken to Chicago by train and a burial service will be conducted at the grave in Graceland cemetery at 4 p. m. Lowden will be buried beside his wife, Florence Pullman Lowden, who died in 1937.

The Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, retired pastor of the Central church of Chicago, will conduct the services in Oregon and at the grave.

With the former Illinois governor when the end came was his nurse, Miss Maxine Brown, who came here with him Jan. 18, and W. P. Blodgett, Grand Rapids, Mich., lumber man, a long time friend.

Miss Brown said that Lowden was tired and feeble when he reached here, but that he was able to be about until a week or so ago when Dr. S. H. Watson of Tucson ordered him to remain in bed.

Four Children in Touch.

Lowden's four children, who had kept in close touch with their father's condition by telephone, were notified of the death by Miss Brown, who announced the tentative funeral plans after consultation with them. They are a son, Pullman Lowden, Bryant, O., and three daughters, Mrs. Albert F. Madlener Jr. and Mrs. Philip Miller of Chicago and Mrs. Frederick Wierdsma of New York.

Lowden held only two offices—governor and congressman—during more than 30 years of active participation in Republican politics, but few men in history came closer to the Presidency without attaining it. He twice refused nomination for the vice presidency and turned down many offers of cabinet position, diplomatic posts, and other high offices.

Spoke for Landon.

After the 1928 campaign Lowden lived in quiet retirement on his 5,000 acre farm, stepping briefly into the national picture to speak for Alf M. Landon in 1936 and giving a radio talk in October, 1940, in behalf of the Republican ticket. He was consulted frequently by midwestern Republican leaders on party affairs.

His last interview with the press was given here on his birthday. It was a plea that contending nations approach the peace table without rancor or passion in an effort to assume an enduring peace in the future.

MIDWEST'S FAVORITE SON

Frank Orren Lowden, World War I governor, was called the favorite son of the midwest. He was successful as a teacher, lawyer, business man, and farmer. He was a national authority on farm problems. His famed Sinnissippi farm in Ogle county is noted for the fine Holstein cattle bred there.

But perhaps Lowden was better known as the man who missed by a narrow margin realizing his ambition to become President of the United States; as the man who in 1924 declined the Republican nomination of Vice President, a nomination that was tantamount to election; and as the man who turned down more federal appointments than any other person in American history.

Entered Politics in 1896.

Lowden entered politics in 1896 as a speaker in the "full dinner pail" campaign for President McKinley. He was active as a Republican leader until a few years before his death. Yet in that length of time he held but two elective offices. He served in the national house of representatives

HONEST GAMBLER RISES TO RULE OVER BIG UNION

New Chapter Is Bared in Gang Labor Control.

BY ORVILLE DWYER AND GEORGE HARTMANN.

This is a story of the spectacular rise of William J. [Bill] Donovan from "Honest Gambler" to the presidency of the international laundry workers' unions with 45,000 members thruout the United States.

Twenty thousand of these dues paying members are Chicagoans. They belong to the big Chicago local No. 46.

Donovan's ascension to the throne of the laundry unions was ordered by the Chicago gangsters' syndicate, ruled until Friday, by the big three, Frank Nitti, Paul Ricca, and Louis Campanga. Nitti killed himself Friday afternoon.

In a previous story THE TRIBUNE has told how these three terrorists, and their lieutenants, took over the motion picture industry unions, using George E. Browne, a hard drinking Chicago union boss, and Willie Bioff of Chicago pander notoriety as their agents.

Sought Accounting for $1,100,000.

Serious charges against Donovan and a picture of his inadequacy as union leader have been the subjects of court rulings. Eight members of local No. 46 of the laundry workers' union hired attorneys and filed a complaint in equity in the Superior court of Cook county on Sept. 5, 1941. The bill asked for an accounting of $1,100,000 in union funds and the appointment of a receiver for the union. A master in chancery recommended that the suit be dismissed and the union officials, including Donovan, were given a clean bill of health on the finding that they had been elected five years ago and had had audits made of their books.

The complaint which was thus dismissed had charged that "William J. Donovan is not and never has been a member of any laundry union and is not eligible to membership or to hold office in the union, never was elected by the union, and, on the contrary, is known as a hoodlum and labor racketeer.

"Prior to assuming the presidency of the union and the international, Donovan was a saloon keeper on West Madison street, and for many years was the owner or interested in the Bon Air Country club, which was a notorious resort where William [Billy] Skidmore and Big Bill Johnson and the gangster syndicate held their meetings and gambling was permitted to flourish under protection.

Known as Hoodlum.

"William J. Donovan had a police record in Chicago prior to May 24, 1932, on which date the police records were destroyed by order of the commissioner of police. The plaintiffs assert that Donovan has a general reputation in the police department as a hoodlum and gangster and on the basis of said reputation was taken into custody in February, 1938, and held for investigation by the state attorney's office on the supposition of having killed one Lloyd Rourke by beating him with a baseball bat during a strike of laundry workers at the Del Prado hotel in Chicago.

"The plaintiffs also charge that William J. Donovan employs a chauffeur, one Ben Cohen, who was taken into custody, held for investigation, and partly identified as one of the men who clubbed or had knowledge of the clubbing of Paul Stoddard in February, 1938."

Charge Treasury Depleted.

The plaintiffs also charged in their bill that "Donovan has managed the affairs of the union by means of violence and treachery and also by means of the distribution of large sums of money . . . and as a result it was useless for any member to complain or protest against such policies because it was dangerous."

The suit, which got nowhere, alleged that the union treasury should have $1,119,800 in it, but that in reality there was a deficit of $1,069,000.

Donovan, according to police, had been pushed out of the gambling racket. In the '30s he made an honest living for a while selling coffee measuring devices to restaurant owners. But in 1935 the gamblers decided to take over the Chicago Laundry Workers, an organization which for 20 years had been only the shell of a union. The gang saw that it was rich in possibilities.

They knew that there were 200 or more big laundries in Chicago with 30,000 workers. They knew that there were 3,500 smaller establishments with an additional 15,000 employés. They saw that all of these workers, most of them women, and a large percentage of them Negroes, were hard working, meagerly paid, and without any real union representation. So Donovan was put in charge of local No. 46, supplied with hoodlum lieutenants, and told to go to work.

Call Series of Strikes.

In 1937 a series of strikes was called in laundries on the west side of Chicago. They were aimed to impress the members of the Laundry Owners' association. Coöperation of the drivers belonging to the Laundry and Dyeing House workers was obtained. This drivers' union was the one described yesterday in the story which told of the battle for control which claimed the lives of John G. Clay, Big Tim Murphy, and Paddy Berrell.

On Nov. 6, 1937, after 20 years of futile union efforts to organize the laundry workers in the Chicago area, the laundry owners capitulated and a contract covering 18,000 workers employed by the association members was signed. Donovan explained the situation:

"We started to organize local No. 46 in 1935 and after five other unions in the last 20 years tried and failed to organize the industry, we got a contract granting us a closed shop and the checkoff system and we're going out to organize the 500 smaller laundries with their 15,000 workers."

Donovan had done his work well for the gangsters and they rewarded him.

Donovan's Unit Largest.

The national convention of the laundry workers was opened in Denver, Colo., on May 16, 1939. The international union had 45,000 members thruout the country, but Donovan's local No. 46 was the largest individual unit. The convention was run by the gang represented by George Scalise, the Capone lieutenant, who was then international president of the big Building Services International union.

Scalise is now in federal penitentiary for having embezzled thousands of dollars from this union whose members are janitors, elevator operators and charwomen. The gang was also represented by Max Caldwell, international representative of the Retail Clerks International union. Caldwell is now under indictment in Miami, Fla., charged with having engineered a conspiracy to keep one of his bookkeepers, who disappeared simultaneously with the beginning of an investigation of the union's tangled financial affairs, from responding to his draft call.

Caldwell is charged in suits filed by Chicago members of his union with having looted the treasury of $910,000.

Buy Up Delegates.

Under the watchful eyes of Scalise, Thomas J. Burke, head of the theatrical janitors, and Caldwell, the delegates at the Denver convention vacated a by-law requiring a referendum vote by the entire membership to elect national officers. This action made it possible for the convention by direct vote to elect Donovan by acclamation, and that was done.

Before the voting, however, Scalise, Burke, and Caldwell, with other "heavy men" were seen taking some delegates into private rooms. In cases where delegates were endowed with stiff backbones and not too amenable to the Scalise-Burke-Caldwell brand of persuasion, they were entertained, wined and dined.

The "big shots" spent with free hands. Nothing was too good for the boys whose favor they would seek on the floor of the convention when the voting for control of the international started. They wanted to be certain to get Donovan in as president, his hands on the purse strings. And anyway, the union was paying all the checks and so what was the difference?

These tactics were typical of the Nitti-Ricca-Campagna technique. So Donovan came back to Chicago in command not only of the city's 20,000, but of the country's 45,000 $18 a week laundry workers—in splendid position, as charged in the suit, to handle the money accumulated from thousands of workers paying in dues of $20.80 a year.

Many Deeds of Violence.

Donovan's climb to power was accompanied by many deeds of violence, the most notable of which was the murder of Rourke, an independent laundry contractor, who was bludgeoned with a baseball bat Feb. 10, 1938. Rourke, 31 years old, died two days later.

Rourke was clubbed after he left the Del Prado hotel at 1307 Hyde Park boulevard and was entering the Fairfax, a block away, at 1469.

The Del Prado was being picketed because of trouble with the Miscellaneous Hotel Employés' union. Hoodlums were giving the hotel trouble thru several unions. Tires of guests were slashed. Mothers and babies who called on a Del Prado hotel physician were terrorized.

Food Deliveries Halted.

One rainy day hoodlums forced mothers to park more than a half block away from the hotel and carry their infants thru the rain. Coal and food deliveries were stopped, either thru unions, or by gangsters who frightened away the drivers. Rourke refused to be terrorized and was slain.

The case was investigated by police and the state's attorney's office for several days without result. Ben Cohen, Donovan's chauffeur, who had a record as a slugger, was questioned and released. Donovan disappeared after the killing. Then, a week after Rourke died, he walked into the state's attorney's office, and disclaimed any knowledge of the crime. He was at that time secretary treasurer of the Trades and Crafts council, which had been formed by the hoodlums as part of the bartenders and hotel employés group. Eventually the search was abandoned and the case went into the records as another unsolved labor crime.

Crime Body Calls on Police to Solve O'Donnell Shooting

BY JAMES DOHERTY.

Police Commissioner Allman was urged yesterday by the Chicago Crime commission to bring to justice the men responsible for the attempt to murder Edward [Spike] O'Donnell, former beer gangster who described himself as agent of a city paving combination. O'Donnell was shot in the back last Monday. He immediately blamed the attempted assassination on his deals with the paving clique coöperating with Mike Carrozzo's branch of the crime-labor-politics alliance.

Virgil W. Peterson, operating director of the crime commission, wrote Allman a letter asking that he coöperate with State's Atty. Courtney in seeking the solution of the shooting. Discovery of the persons and motives back of the attempted murder should be possible in view of the expected recovery of O'Donnell, Peterson wrote.

Stress Need of Coöperation.

"The truth ought to come out about the O'Donnell shooting," said Peterson. "It will if the police coöperate with the state's attorney."

City police, thus far, have made no progress in their investigation of the shooting, it was explained, because [1] O'Donnell had made no statement, and [2] the men he said he slugged before the shooting in his efforts to collect a paving deal fee of $70,000 were out of the city.

County highway police still guarded O'Donnell's door in the Little Company of Mary hospital and his physician had asked officials not to question him before Tuesday.

Beating Victim to Return.

City detectives were advised that Joseph Butler, city superintendent of streets, who obtained a 60 day leave of absence Jan. 21 after he was beaten by O'Donnell, is expected to return tomorrow. It was rumored in the city hall, however, that Butler's days as superintendent of streets are over.

The other man Spike said he beat is Robert S. McKay, a paving contractor.

It is planned to call O'Donnell before the grand jury and ask him to tell why he was shot. He has asserted that "State's Atty. Courtney knows why I was shot" and he has also announced "I was shot because of the paving deal." He will be asked to amplify those statements to the grand jury, State's Atty. Courtney said.

Unauthorized CIO Strike Ends at Inland Wire Plant

Twelve men who walked out of the Inland Wire Products company plant, 3947 Lowe avenue, in protest against the discharge of a union steward of the United Steel Workers of America, C. I. O., went back to work yesterday.

BANDITS HIJACK LIQUOR TRUCK; KIDNAP DRIVER

Bandits yesterday hijacked a truck loaded with 636 cases of whisky valued at $28,000 at Clinton and Harrison streets, kidnaping the driver, Tony Coconate, 16 years old, 823 North Francisco avenue. The truck was found abandoned behind 3318 Adams street, with part of its load missing. Police said an inventory showed 103 cases of liquor, valued at $3,400, had been taken.

Coconate told police he obtained a driver's license by giving his age as 18 and that he was an extra driver supplied to the Federal Truck Lines, 728 South Clinton street, by the truck drivers' union. The truck arrived here Friday night from Louisville, Ky., and Coconate was driving it to a distributing company.

He said three men in an automobile crowded him to the curb, forced him into their car, and drove him around for some time before releasing him.

It All Comes Out Now, Hubby Knew Hiding Place

Mrs. Howard Wimbles, 818 Lakeside place, learned that $80 was missing from a hiding place in her home yesterday and reported to police that she suspected a couple who had inspected the apartment. Mrs. Wimbles had to take it all back last night, however, when her husband came home and told her he had the $80.

Inquest Witness Tells of Gangster's Ill Health.

Cook county closed the case of Frank Nitti with a verdict of suicide yesterday, but agents of the federal bureau of investigation did not drop the matter. Acting at the request of United States Attorney J. Albert Woll, the agents began an inquiry to determine whether the gang boss received any message of warning before he shot and killed himself Friday afternoon.

Nitti was one of seven Chicago gangsters indicted Friday in New York on charges of extortion and mail fraud in a $2,500,000 conspiracy against movie executives and their union employés. Woll said Nitti's death will have no effect on the prosecution of the others, and explained that evidence linking Nitti to other members of the gang will be admissible at the trial notwithstanding Nitti's death.

Removal Warrants Issued.

Removal warrants against all seven of the Chicago defendants in the racket conspiracy were issued yesterday by United States Commissioner Edwin K. Walker, and were placed in the hands of Marshal William H. McDonnell for serving. The warrant against Nitti was marked "defendant deceased" and returned to New York.

The inquest into Nitti's death, held in the county morgue, was a perfunctory affair and a great contrast to other gang killing inquests held in the same room. Time after time such inquests have ended with a verdict of "gunshot wound by persons unknown" and the testimony has been devoted to blaming mysterious persons with dark overcoats.

There was nothing like that yesterday, and there was little drama in the scene. Nitti's widow, Antoinette, was not present, nor were any of the long time associates of the slain man. Only one relative appeared to testify, Charles J. Caravetta, who identified himself as a resident of Pullman, Mich., and as a brother of Nitti's wife.

Name Frank Ralph Nitto.

Caravetta gave Nitti's name as Frank Ralph Nitto, and said he had lived at 712 South Selbourne road, Riverside. For Nitti's occupation the witness said "retired." The witness testified that Nitti married his sister nine months ago, and that he has a son Joseph, 9, by a former marriage.

Caravetta said he last saw Nitti about four months ago, when he appeared to be nervous and ill tempered. Also, he said, members of the family had told him that Nitti had been acting strangely lately, as if he did not have the full powers of his mind.

"He was suffering with a heart ailment and he had stomach trouble," said Caravetta. "I think he was temporarily insane."

Dr. William D. McNally, coroner's toxicologist, filed a report that Nitti's blood contained .23 of 1 per cent of alcohol, an amount which he said would be sufficient to cause an ordinary person to become intoxicated.

Conductor Describes Suicide.

Testimony indicating that Nitti was drunk when he shot himself also was given by William F. Seebauer, 3206 48th court, Cicero, who was conductor of the freight train passing thru North Riverside at the time Nitti fired the fatal shots. Seebauer told how he and two other members of the train crew saw the gangster pull the trigger of his pistol as he sat slumped against a fence beside the right of way near Harlem avenue and Cermak road.

Dr. Samuel A. Levinson, coroner's physician, testified that one bullet thru Nitti's right temple had caused his death. The jury's verdict, returned after brief deliberation, was that Nitti "committed suicide while temporarily insane and in a despondent frame of mind."

Treated in Hospital.

Intimates of Nitti who were willing to talk yesterday about his suicide said they believed he ended his life because the New York indictments were the last straw of a series of troubles. They said he was devoted to his former wife, Anna, who died 18 months ago, and to their son, Joseph.

Recently Nitti had been spending much time in hospitals for treatment of a stomach ailment and for the old injuries to his spine suffered in 1932 when he was shot by a city detective.

Frank Nitti will be buried Tuesday in Mount Carmel cemetery, where his first wife, Anna, was buried 18 months ago. Services will be held at the Iarussi Funeral home, 619 South Ashland avenue, the scene of many gangster funerals a decade ago.

The Chicago's gangland chief's funeral probably will lack the pomp that accompanied those of earlier gang leaders. Priorities rulings have made impossible the purchase of a $15,000 bronze coffin. Instead he will be buried in a transparent velvet lined, bronze plated coffin, the purchase price of which is about $5,000.

Police predicted yesterday that few of Nitti's pals, many of whom are sought by authorities, will be present at the services. Friends said the funeral will be a simple one. At the Nitti home, 712 Selbourne road, Riverside, precautions were made to keep arrangements secret, but all thru the day the place buzzed with activity.

TO SOUTH SIDERS: HERE'S WHY THE PAPER WAS LATE

Hundreds of south side residents served by the Illinois Central railroad wondered yesterday morning what had happened to their mail, or why their newspapers weren't on time.

The apparent dereliction was due, railroad officials explained last night, to the "human element,"—gremlins, if you're air minded—or in other words, it was just one of those things. . . .

The mail and the papers, IC officials said, were dumped down the customary chute at the South Water street baggage room preparatory to being loaded on the baggage car. But the regular baggage man was off duty, and his relief man, thru a misunderstanding, wasn't there either. So the baggage languished in the chute, and the baggage car slid away, empty.

JUDGE STUDIES TOUHY MOVE TO QUASH CHARGE

Circuit Judge Roscoe E. South of Watseka, Iroquois county, yesterday took under advisement a motion to quash an indictment charging Roger Touhy with aiding in the escape of Edward Darlak from Stateville prison last Oct. 9. He set the next hearing for March 31. Joseph P. Harrington, attorney for Touhy, contended that each of the seven in the mass escape was working for himself, not aiding the others. Touhy, Darlak, and three others of those involved in the escape are back in prison. The other two were killed during the capture.

FIND MRS. NITTI WAS SECRETARY TO SLAIN O'HARE

Identified by Brother at Husband's Inquest.

Mrs. Frank Nitti, widow of the gang chieftain who shot and killed himself Friday, is the former confidential secretary to Edward J. O'Hare, reputed front man for the Capone syndicate, who was slain by shotgun assassins on Nov. 8, 1939, persons close to the family disclosed yesterday.

Mrs. Nitti did not attend the inquest into her husband's death at the county morgue yesterday. Chief of Police Allen Rose of North Riverside said she was at her home, 712 Selbourne road, Riverside, convalescing from shock. She was represented at the inquest by a brother, Charles J. Caravetta of Pullman, Mich., who said his sister was 41 years old and was married to Nitti nine months ago.

Reported Knowledge of Danger.

Mrs. Nitti, then Antoinette [Toni] Cavaretta [she spelled the name differently from her brother] told police at the time of the O'Hare killing that her employer knew for three weeks before his death that he was in grave danger and showed it by continual nervous tension.

O'Hare, rated a millionaire when he died, was president of Sportsman's Park race track, manager of Al Capone's Hawthorne dog track, regent of Capone dog track holdings in Florida and Massachusetts, and was interested in two advertising agencies and an insurance company in Chicago.

He had a yacht, a penthouse near Taunton, Mass., an oceanside villa near the Miami Kennel club in which he was a stockholder, and an imposing home at 221 Franklin road, Glencoe. In Chicago he usually stayed at the Illinois Athletic club.

O'Hare was a mysterious figure, friendly with prominent men in sports, business, and politics. He was outspoken among his friends against gangsters, and ordered police to keep them away from Sportsman's Park. Secretary-treasurer of the park, however, was Johnny Patton, known as "the boy mayor of Burnham," who was Al Capone's vice overlord for Burnham, Cicero, and Stickney for many years. Patton was questioned about O'Hara's death.

Manager of Dog Track.

O'Hare attracted the attention of Capone men in 1928 when he was associated with the Madison Kennel club, Madison county, Illinois, and was persuaded to come to Chicago to manage Capone's Hawthorne dog track.

O'Hare was slain in his expensive coupe at Ogden avenue and Rockwell street by killers who ambushed him in another car. Apparently he knew his life was in danger, for he raced the killer's car for some distance, his own car crashing at high speed when two shotgun charges thru the window struck his head and neck.

There were several theories about his death, one of which, that he was coöperating with federal bureau of investigation agents and was killed in reprisal, was supported by a note found on his body signed "Toni" [his secretary]. It read: "Mr. Woltz phoned and wants to know if you or Mr. Beckman know anything about Clyde Nimerick. He said you are to call Mr. Bennett."

Agents with Those Names.

There were FBI agents in Chicago named Woltz and Bennett at that time, and Henry Beckman formerly was O'Hare's chauffeur and body guard. Nimerick, an ex-convict, said he knew nothing of O'Hare's death.

O'Hare left an estate of $437,768 in cash and securities exclusive of real estate in trust to his son, Lt. Edward J. O'Hare Jr., navy flyer decorated by President Roosevelt last April for shooting down six Jap bombers off the Gilbert Islands; and two daughters, Patricia and Marilyn.

MANY MIDWEST TROOPS IN THREE AFRICA DIVISIONS

5,500 Iowa Guardsmen Serve in 34th.

Three divisions which include many men from the middle west, are now serving on the Tunisian front. This was indicated by the announcement Wednesday by Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, commander in chief in North Africa, that the 1st and 34th divisions and the 1st armored division are among the United States army organizations there.

The 34th, particularly, is a middle western outfit. It is composed largely of National Guard units from Iowa, Minnesota, and North and South Dakota which were mobilized by Presidential order Feb. 10, 1941. Approximately 5,500 officers and men were included in the Iowa units. After a year's training at Camp Claiborne, La., and participating in the large scale maneuvers held in Louisiana, the division was shipped to Ireland and from there to North Africa, where it, along with the 1st and 1st armored divisions, participated in the initial landing. The division is now commanded by Maj. Gen. Charles W. Ryder.

In the first World war the 3d infantry of the Iowa National Guard was selected as a unit of the 42d Rainbow division and later designated as the 168th infantry. Gen. Douglas MacArthur commanded the Rainbow division in World War I. In the present war the American soldiers involved in the recent Tunisia setback, when Marshal Erwin Rommel gambled to take the American base at Tebessa, only to be repulsed, were those of the 168th infantry of the 34th division.

Led by an Iowan.

In the first World war the 168th infantry was led by Maj. Gen. Matthew Tinley of Council Bluffs, Ia., who commanded the 34th division until his retirement in March, 1940. He is now commander of the Iowa State guard, which was organized to replace the National Guard units. In the first World war the 34th division was also a middle western organization formed of National Guard units from the same states of Iowa, Minnesota, North and South Dakota, plus those of Nebraska.

In June, 1941, the 1st division, a regular army outfit, was in training at Fort Devens, Mass., when it was given equipment priorities in order that a potential American expeditionary force might be created in a hurry.

During the first World war the 1st division lived up to its name. It was first to carry the American colors into France and it was at Cantigny on May 28, 1918, that the 1st division scored the first victory won by American troops in that war. It had already been the first to fire on the enemy, the first to take prisoners, the first to suffer casualties.

The 1st fought at Soissons, St. Mihiel and the Aisne and it was at Soissons that the division won that victory which has been called the turning point of the first World war. It is now commanded by Maj. Gen. Terry Allen.

The first armored division is a blend of the very old and the very new in the army. Organized on July 15, 1940, as the army's first answer to the German panzer [armored] division, it includes two of the oldest regiments in the army, the 6th infantry, now the 6th armored infantry, and the 1st cavalry, now the 1st armored regiment. Trained and equipped at Fort Knox, Ky., it pioneered armored force tactics in the United States army. Its first commander was Maj. Gen. Bruce Magruder, who like the commander it now faces, Marshal Rommel, started his army life as a private. It is now commanded by Maj. Gen. Orlando Ward.

The 6th infantry is the oldest regiment in continuous service in the army. First organized in 1789, it was disbanded in 1791 and then reorganized in 1808.

The 1st cavalry was formed in 1833 as the United States Dragoons to protect pioneers moving west of the Mississippi. Its first adjutant was Jefferson Davis, later president of the confederacy, while its many other distinguished officers included Gen. John J. Pershing.

Chicago's Own Division.

Altho in the first world war the 1st division was formed of men from every state and every possession of the Union, it has always been, in a certain sense, Chicago's division.

It was in Chicago in 1927 that the 1st held its 10th reunion. Two Chicagoans, H. C. Godfrey and Rene F. Felly, gave it two of its firsts. Godfrey was the first American captured by the Germans in the last war, while Felly took part in the first capture of Germans by Americans. It was a man from the 1st division, Sergt. John McClain, who won the first croix de guerre given to an American for bravery in action.

Each year since the war 1st division veterans have held a reunion at Cantigny farm, near Wheaton, Ill., as guests of Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, himself a 1st division veteran.

FIVE MARINE CAPTAINS FROM CHICAGO AREA PROMOTED TO MAJORS

Five residents of Chicago and vicinity are included among 256 marine corps captains who have been promoted to majors, according to an announcement yesterday in Washington, D. C. They are Edmond A. Foss and John V. Sandberg, Chicago; John Ayrault Jr., Evanston; John W. Howe, Winnetka, and Thomas Lee Ridge, Elgin.

Edmond Foss.

John Sandberg.

Foss, 33 years old, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Foss, 5906 Huron street. A graduate of Northwestern university, he was in the marine reserve and went on active duty in February, 1942. He is married and the father of a daughter 2 years old. His wife resides at 1241 Monroe avenue, River Forest.

Sandberg, 32 years old, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Sandberg, 6551 Stewart avenue. He attended the University of Illinois and was employed at Swift and company before enlisting in the marines in June, 1941. His wife, the former Jenna Lou Brown of Elmhurst, is living at 600 Sheridan square, Evanston.

Ayrault resided at 1452 Oak avenue in Evanston, but left there a year ago to go into training. Howe's Winnetka address was given as 94 Woodley road, but the family has moved. The announcement lists Ridge's address as 206 Division street, Elgin.

Wheel Up Supplies, Shells for Decisive Clash.

ALLIED HDQ. IN NORTH AFRICA, March 20 (AP).—A calm brought on by heavy rains in the north and center and dust storms in the south settled over the Tunisian front today while Lt. Gen. George Patton's American divisions consolidated their holds on Gafsa and El Guetar, 60 miles from the German life line skirting the east coast.

[This British radio said American troops had reached Sened, 25 miles east of Gafsa and some 70 miles northwest of the axis port of Gabes.]

But the end of the rainy season is at hand and the opposing armies wheeled up supplies and shells for what may be the decisive battle.

If Patton can negotiate the remaining mountain ridges between him and the coastal road, Marshal Erwin Rommel will be caught in the Mareth line.

Giraud Predicts Offensive.

The Algiers radio said the French commander in chief, Gen. Henri Giraud, was present when the Americans conquered Gafsa, and made this comment:

"I am convinced Gafsa marks the beginning of an offensive which will go on as far as Berlin. I was present at the recapture of Gafsa. Realizing the courage and valor of our troops, the Germans and Italians left even quicker than they came."

British Gain Reported.

The radio also said that in the south the army had won new positions east of the Mareth line.

While Gen. Eisenhower's headquarters said the whole Tunisian front was quiet, Berlin and Rome claimed a successful axis attack in the north.

The axis radios said German and Italian troops had captured an important position, 1,600 prisoners, 30 guns, and 16 armored vehicles.

YANKS HUNT FOE

BY JOHN THOMPSON.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

WITH U. S. FORCES AT GAFSA, Tunisia, March 19 [Delayed].—The American troops today pushed their patrols to the east of Gafsa, seeking further contact with the enemy, altho there were indications that the Germans may withdraw again.

From a slit trench under some withered olive trees at El Guetar, 12 miles east of Gafsa, today I watched enemy shells bursting over the nearby plain as the axis artillery fired on the American troops. It was apparent that the shelling, which brought a quick response from our guns, was coming from three mountains north of the road to the coast, the Djebels Rbata, Hamran, and Chemsi.

Exchange Rifle Fire.

The enemy also may have guns on Djebel Berda, southeast of El Guetar.

While there was no major fighting today, our patrols occasionally exchanged rifle fire with the Germans. Heavy rainfall has turned dry gulches into raging torrents which roar across the main highways and turn secondary roads into quagmires.

If one had the time, he could enjoy the benefits of the rain, which has turned this usually arid land into a spring green. Brilliant yellow, white, and purple desert flowers line every road, while grazing lands, normally covered with coarse grass, and blooming in fresh green patches.

GUIANA PLEDGES LOYALTY TO BOTH GIRAUD, DE GAULLE

Each Names Governor for Revolting Colony.

CAYENNE, French Guiana, March 19 [Via San Juan, delayed]—(AP).—A peaceful, bloodless coup carried out on March 16 by high colonial army officers with the backing of the population brought France's largest American possession to the allied side in the war.

The people are enthusiastic in support of both anti-axis factions of Gen. Henri Giraud, high commissioner for North Africa, and Gen. Charles de Gaulle, leader of the Fighting French.

[A dispatch from Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, Saturday said Gov. Veber and four officials had taken refuge there with their families and "will be under control of the Surinam government."]

Forced to Decide.

The governor resigned after representatives of the army and the people had forced him to issue a declaration advising the United States and Brazilian consuls that the colonial government of French Guiana had decided to join the allies. A committee acting in behalf of the civilians and the military then took control and dispatched cables to Giraud and De Gaulle.

The action was announced thru the following proclamation:

"The governor of French Guiana and Inini territory hereby makes known that he has advised the consul of the United States of America and the consul of Brazil the decision that this government has joined the allied powers.

Calls for Discipline.

"By taking such decision, the chief of the colony aimed to insure in the most favorable manner the existence of the colony and the life of the population. He relies on discipline, feeling fully convinced that any one in his place will give under the new order the proof of his absolute dignity.

"He calls for each and all to remain calm.

"Vive la Guiane Française! Vive la France!"

BOTH FACTIONS SEEK CONTROL.

With the populace of French Guiana favoring both sides equally, a contest between Gen. Giraud and Gen. de Gaulle for control of the South American colony seems likely. Both generals have appointed new governors for the colony, according to dispatches, De Gaulle naming Maurice Bertaut, now in the Cameroons as chief administrator of Fighting French colonies, and Giraud naming Col. Albert Jean Paul le Bel of his military mission in Washington.

The delicate balance between the two factions may be adjusted at the forthcoming meeting of the two leaders in Algiers.

Giraud's mission in Washington announced Thursday that French Guiana had pledged allegiance to the North African high commissioner. Then De Gaulle's national committee in London announced that the Fighting French were the beneficiaries, saying this announcement superseded reports that the colony had lined up with Giraud.

In Washington the state department has been backing Gen. Giraud, but no statement was forthcoming from Secretary Hull yesterday.

Martinique and Guadeloupe, now the only Vichy controled colonies in America, were silent as to their future course.

SPELLMAN FLIES TO LONDON, THEN HAS AUTO CRASH

LONDON, March 20 (AP).—Archbishop Francis J. Spellman of New York, who has flown safely from the United States to Italy, to North Africa and to Britain, was involved in a minor motor car crash a few minutes after his arrival in London today from Algiers. He was not injured.

His car collided with a parked automobile on Paddington station's exit runway. A tire blew out and a wheel and a fender were damaged.

He was met at the station by Archbishop William Godfrey, the apostolic delegate, and Bishop Edward Myers, auxiliary bishop of Westminster, Britain's ranking prelate since the death Wednesday of Cardinal Arthur Hinsley, archbishop of Westminster. Archbishop Spellman is expected to attend the funeral services for Cardinal Hinsley Tuesday.

Third 6,000 Ton Vessel Also Attacked.

ALLIED HDQ. IN AUSTRALIA, March 21 [Sunday]—(AP).—Allied bombers, continuing their attacks on Japanese positions above Australia, scored hits on two ships off northwest New Guinea yesterday, and attacked a third vessel which was moving under naval escort toward Rabaul, New Britain.

These attacks were announced in the noon communique, while other reports indicated there might have been a second submarine in Lae harbor Friday when allied bombers destroyed one U-boat there. There was no report, however, that this second submarine was struck.

In Saturday's actions, a Mitchell bomber scored a direct hit on a 10,000-ton merchantman 25 miles east of Cape Vandenbosch in Dutch New Guinea, and followed it up with a vicious strafing attack.

Start Fire on Ship.

A Liberator on reconnaissance found a small group of vessels moving off the Gazelle peninsula toward Rabaul, picked out a 6,000-ton ship and attacked it, but the results were not observed.

Madang, facing Astrolabe bay on the north coast of New Guinea, was visited by a heavy bomber which attacked Japanese installations on nearby Beliao Island. Below there at Finschhafen, New Guinea, fires were started by heavy bombers.

Bomb Amboina Islands.

After dusk Saturday, bombers roared over the Island of Amboina, 600 miles north of Darwin, Australia, dropping 500-pound bombs and incendiaries, but clouds prevented observation of results.

Southeast of Amboina in the Kai Islands, allied planes swept in two waves over Langgoer, which has been receiving increasing attention from Gen. Douglas MacArthur's air arm. The medium bombers scored direct hits, then strafed the village of Faan.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

12 AXIS DIVISIONS TIED UP IN SERBIA BY RED PARTISANS

Worried Nazis Act to Wipe Out Communist Force.

BY SAM BREWER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ANKARA, Turkey, March 19 [Delayed].—Heavy fighting is going on in Jugo-Slavia and for two months has tied up as many axis troops as has the war in Tunisia, it is declared here on the authority of underground sources and apparently admitted by the Germans' own communiques.

Two months ago the Germans, worried by the success of the "partisan" troops, decided to try to crush them before there was any possibility of an allied invasion. They launched a campaign in Bosnia and Croatia with six German, five Italian and one Croatian divisions backed up with tanks, artillery, and a strong air force.

The Chetniks, led by Gen. Draja Mihailovitch, are now inactive and biding their time in the mountains and this particular Nazi campaign has been against the Moscow backed partisans who are in control of an estimated 16,000 square miles.

Tell of Heavy Fighting.

German correspondents told of heavy fighting and described skillfully prepared partisan pillboxes and bunkers. Tho they continue to call them "bandits," the Germans speak of the partisans' well drilled units and report they "are well armed with British and Russian equipment."

The military leader of this phase of Jugo-Slav resistance is Kosta Nadetch, 32 years old, of Zagreb. The political chief is reported by the Germans to be Prof. Josef Bross, former president of the Jugo-Slav parliament. The partisans' strength is estimated to be from 200,000 to 300,000, including both Communists and non-Communists. They comprise the strongest armed fighting force now fighting the axis in Jugo-Slavia.

Heavy fighting has been going on near Vrginmost, which is 40 miles southwest of Zagreb; Slunj, 30 miles southwest of Vrginmost; Krupa, 60 miles south of Zagreb, and Ubisa and Gospic, some 40 miles south of Slunj.

Serb Factions Hostile.

One German correspondent said that "our troops are finding this a bitter and difficult campaign with many dangers." He also referred to aerial reconnaissance of a munitions factory, which indicates the Jugo-Slav forces have their own sources of supply, in addition to outside help. He said that the Germans have killed 2,800 Jugo-Slavs.

There have been no recent reports of fighting between the Chetniks and the partisans, but unfortunately there is an armed hostility between these Jugo-Slav factions. As one Jugo-Slav told me:

"Both the Chetniks and the partisans are loyal Jugo-Slavs and the bitter enemies of Germany and Italy. However, our country is in the midst of a revolution simultaneously with the war against the axis. The Chetniks represent the reactionary element and the partisans the left wing element, tho many are not Communists. Means must be found to unite the armies and get the benefit of all their strength against the enemy. The Germans are calling the partisans a 'bolshevist menace' in an effort to swing the Chetniks and others against them."

CHINESE RETAKE IMPORTANT TOWN IN RICE REGION

CHUNGKING, China, March 20 (AP).—The Chinese Central news agency said Hwajung, an important town northwest of Tungting lake, was recaptured by Chinese forces today.

The town had been captured by the Japanese a few days ago in a smash aimed at the important rice growing area west of the lake, where the Japanese had only to level local dikes to run a large part of the next rice crop.

A Japanese counter-attack south of the Yangtze river in the Hupeh-Hunan border region has been smashed, the Chinese communique said.

WOUNDED CREW FLIES A RIDDLED BOMBER TO BASE

Hit by Four Shells, but No One Killed.

[By Wireless to the New York Times and The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, March 20.—The United States air force based in Britain in the very near future will be of a size very nearly approaching that of the royal air force, according to Maj. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, commander of the 8th United States army air forces, in answers to a questionnaire written for the London Sunday Express. Before very long, Eaker said, it will be able to assume a "full partnership and bear its full share of the air burden."

While the American air offensive will be conducted during daylight, Eaker said this did not preclude the possibility of some night missions being undertaken. Eaker said he was satisfied that United States heavy bombers can "beat off the best enemy fighter opposition without excessive or uneconomical loss" and that their crews can "hit any target they can see."

Some valuable lessons had been learned, too, he said, about the amount of and the kind of training necessary for daylight bombing. He is satisfied that United States air crews had the skill and sufficient "taste for the fight" and will to carry it thru.

New Bombers Coming.

"The great mass of our American air force which will be employed this year," he said, "will be Fortresses and Liberators. New bombers—better bombers—are coming on. They will be put into combat as fast as they arrive. They will, being later, obviously be better because they will carry bigger cargoes of destruction, be better armed and equipped to defend themselves."

He replied to critics who think the United States is wrong to bomb by day or that the R. A. F. is wrong to bomb by night, saying that "each of our efforts is a complement to the other." He added:

"It is highly desirable for us to bomb by day because the enemy can then be attacked any hour of the day or night—the R. A. F. doing the night bombing. Enemy defenses get no rest."

Bomb Railway at Louvain.

LONDON, March 20 (AP).—Speedy mosquito bombers of the R. A. F. attacked railway targets at Louvain and other points in Belgium at dusk this evening, the air ministry reported tonight. The communique said a Lancaster bomber also dropped explosives on a railway target at Leer in northwest Germany, during a dawn reconnaissance flight. All the aircraft returned safely, the air ministry said.

BRITISH GAIN IN COUNTER-ATTACK ON BURMA FRONT

NEW DELHI, India, March 20 (AP).—The British Indian army appeared tonight to have absorbed the force of a determined Japanese counter-attack and was moving back against Donbaik, north of Akyab, in the wake of a punishing naval bombardment which had started numerous fires in the enemy jungle stronghold.

"Fighting continues in the Arakan district," a communique from Marshal Archibald Wavell said. "In the Mayu peninsula our forward troops have made progress toward Donbaik."

The coastal naval forces were challenged by Japanese shore guns but escaped without damage or casualty. Donbaik lies almost due west of Rathedaung, 25 miles north of Akyab, across the Mayu river. It is at the tip of the Mayu peninsula. East of the Mayu, the British said their positions were maintained without important change.

REDS PUSH NAZIS BACK ON NORTH, CENTRAL FRONTS

Hold Firm Against Heavy Blows on Donetz Line.

LONDON, March 21 [Sunday]—(AP).—Russian troops scored fresh gains yesterday south of Lake Ilman and in the push on Smolensk, while in the south the Nazis lost 800 men in their ceaseless effort to crack the Red army's Donetz river line below Kharkov, Moscow announced early today.

German tanks loaded with tommy gunners attempted to break into a town in the Chuguev sector, 22 miles southeast of Kharkov, but "struck our minefield and were blown up," said the midnight bulletin recorded by the soviet monitor.

Nazis Claim Two Towns.

Thus the Russians indicated their southern lines were holding firm under repeated onslaughts by reënforced German troops, while the armies of the center and northwest continued to gain despite a thaw. Approximately 3,220 Germans were reported killed yesterday.

The German radio claimed the capture of Chuguev, which is on the western bank of the Donetz, and also Sevsk, 170 miles northwest of Kharkov, but this was not confirmed by the Russian communique.

Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's forces converging on Staraya Russa, Nazi stronghold south of Lake Ilmen, occupied a strongly fortified enemy position.

On the central front, Russian dispatches indicated that Durovo, a junction on the Vyazma-Smolensk railway, is menaced by the Red army driving from the east. The Russians were said to have cleared the upper Dnieper from its headwaters to the railroad, and the Dnieper crosses that line less than 10 miles east of Durovo. Another Russian column pushing down from Bely also threatens Durovo, which is only 60 miles northeast of Smolensk.

Capture More Places.

The German high command claimed 50,000 Russians had been killed and 19,594 captured in the southern campaign since Feb. 13, and that 3,372 guns, 1,410 tanks, and 345 heavy cannon had been destroyed or captured.

The Germans also told of gains northwest of Kursk and around Belgorod. The Russians never have confirmed the German claim that Belgorod, 50 miles north of Kharkov, had been retaken Friday by the Nazis and made no mention of these sectors in the midnight bulletin.

HUNGARIAN ARMY IS REPORTED OUT OF RUSSIAN WAR

BERNE, Switzerland, March 20.—Additional proof that the Hungarian army has ceased active participation in the Russian campaign was shown today in publication of the following communique from Honved [Hungarian army] headquarters:

"In the future, Honved communiques will only be published should the occasion warrant. Since operations against the Russians ended with success for the axis arms in the region of Kursk, the combat area is daily moving away from territory interesting to Magyar nations and Hungarian troops are no longer involved."

Budapest reports hint that of 15 Hungarian divisions once engaged in Russia, all but seven have returned to national territory, where they are being quietly assembled in annexed Transylvania.

R. A. F. Attacks 14 Trains in South Italy and Sicily

VALLETTA, Malta, March 20 (AP).—Fourteen trains in southern Italy and northern Sicily were attacked by the R. A. F. from Málta last night and fires were started among freight cars, a British communique said today.

ITALIANS BOMB EXCHANGE SHIP WITH 788 ABOARD

ANKARA, Turkey, March 20 (AP).—The British ship Talma, carrying 788 Italian and German prisoners of war to Turkey for an exchange with British prisoners held by the axis barely escaped disaster from bombs dropped Friday by an Italian plane over the Mediterranean, it was disclosed today as the ship arrived at Mersin.

An Italian bomber dropped six bombs alongside the Talma, which immediately radioed to Italian authorities asking them to call off the bomber. The bomber then disappeared.

The Italian ship Gradisca, bringing British prisoners, also arrived at Mersin today. The exchange was delayed until tomorrow because of high seas. One of the British prisoners to be exchanged, it was disclosed, is Adm. Walter Henry Cowan, who was reported captured by the Italians in Africa on May 31, 1942.

Report Nazis Establish Krupp Factory at Kiev

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

The Berlin radio reported yesterday that a factory branch of Germany's Krupp steel and munitions works has been established at Kiev in the Russian Ukraine to supply the industries of the German occupied Ukraine with steel and machines. The main Krupp plants in Germany are at Essen.

POOR LITTLE RICH DEBS IN LONDON MAKE THEIR BOW

LONDON, March 20 (AP).—In homemade gowns and minus silk stockings, 200 British debutantes celebrated the biggest social event of their lives last night—war or no war.

They attended the annual Queen Charlotte's birthday ball, London's unofficial coming out party, and—it being war time—the only one the girls will have.

Altho they are members of some of Britain's wealthiest and most aristocratic families, many wore rayon and cotton stockings, because silk virtually is unobtainable in Great Britain now. But they joked about it. Some admitted they had made their white ball gowns themselves.

The ball is a charity affair given annually for Queen Charlotte's maternity hospital.

400 Serbians Executed for Sabotaging Railways

CAIRO, Egypt, March 20 (AP).—Official Jugo-Slav quarters reported today that the German commandant at Belgrade announced the execution of 400 Serbs in Pozarevec, 40 miles southeast of Belgrade, in reprisal for railway sabotage, and that the nearby village of Topaonitza was burned down for the same reason.

NAZIS SAY SUBS SINK 33 VESSELS IN SINGLE CONVOY

Claim They Set a Record for U-Boat Warfare.

[By Wireless to the New York Times and The Chicago Tribune.]

BERNE, Switzerland, March 20.—German U-boat packs sank 32 cargo ships aggregating 204,000 tons in attacks on a heavily guarded eastbound convoy in the Atlantic this week, a German communique reported today. In addition, a destroyer was claimed to have been sunk.

[There was no confirmation of the German claim from any allied source.]

The action, the report said, involved a pursuit of several days and resulted in bitter fighting between German submarines and allied destroyers, corvettes and planes.

The sunken tonnage was said to have set a new high for the German U-boat campaign and the encounter was described as the most important U-boat action of the war. If the tonnage figures are confirmed, it is possible that the Germans will bring their sunken tonnage for the month to the million mark.

Nazis Hail Sub Warfare.

The submarine fleet, German naval experts claim, is in its best fighting trim and is constantly being augmented. Success of the U-boat warfare is a source of profound satisfaction in official German quarters, who predict it will play a still greater rôle in defeating allied plans in Africa and projects for establishment of a second front.

The fact that Grand Adm. Karl Doenitz had been consulting Italian military leaders in Rome during the past week was only announced after his return to Berlin.

Meanwhile, English parliamentary debates on the U-boat situation continue to provoke merriment in the German press. Commentators predict the convoy issue will attain greater importance as a factor in naval warfare.

Three Menaces to Convoys.

The "three dimensional convoy," said the military expert of the Essener National Zeitung, marks a new epoch in the war on enemy reënforcements and supply communications. The convoy, he asserted, is exposed to triple dimensional attack from submarines, surface craft and planes.

Since Germany has no convoys to protect she can concentrate her U-boats on enemy tonnage. They can select the time and point of attack at convenience, whereas the defender must guard himself against attacks from three sources. This is said to leave the convoy at the constant mercy of an invisible attacker whose advantage has been demonstrated in the face of heavy naval and aircraft units defending trans-Atlantic shipping.

DEMAND FOR SHIPS AGAIN IS THREAT TO RUBBER PRODUCTION

[Copyright: 1943: By the New York Times.]

Washington, D. C., March 20.—Governmental reports that the synthetic rubber plant construction program is proceeding "better than expected" led today to proposals that the high priority ratings assigned some of the plants be reduced in order to speed up the construction of escort vessels.

Some officials are talking about cutting back a part of the rubber program authorized by James F. Byrnes, economic stabilization director, who acted as President Roosevelt's agent in settling a quarrel over priorities between the war production board and the army and navy.

It was expected that William M. Jeffers, rubber director, would resist vigorously any attempt to cut down his program any further and that the army and navy would support the proposal to reduce it. Some army officials argue that the army's high octane aviation gasoline program competes with the synthetic plants for "critical components."

N. U. GRADUATES TO HEAR NAVAL OFFICIAL TODAY

Bard will give the commencement address at the 85th annual exercises for Northwestern university medical and dental school graduates at 3:30 p. m. today in Thorne hall on the university's Chicago campus. Franklyn Bliss Snyder, Northwestern's president, will officiate and deliver the charge to the class, the first to graduate under an accelerated program begun a year ago.

GUNNERS BLAST TORPEDO RACING AT CONVOY SHIP

U. S. Boat Shoots Down 8 German Planes.

Washington, D. C. March 20 (AP).—The navy gun crew aboard the Liberty ship William Moultrie shot down 8 German planes, damaged 12 others, drove away a submarine, and scored a direct hit on a torpedo, causing it to explode, during a recent north Atlantic voyage to an allied port, the navy reported today.

The Moultrie, due to the gallant fighting, made the trip unharmed. She was one of a convoy which was under almost uninterrupted attack from the air and from under the sea for a week.

Direct Hit on Torpedo.

The navy account said that during the voyage, a torpedo was sighted racing thru the water toward the ship. The guns of the Moultrie were trained upon it, and a direct hit caused the torpedo to explode in the water before it could reach its target.

"When the attacks ceased on the eighth day, the Moultrie's crew had destroyed 8 German planes and had scored hits on 12 others," the navy added.

Crew Members Commended.

FIGHTER PLANES STRAFE JAPS AT MUNDA AIR BASE

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—New aerial attacks on the Japanese bases at Kiska in the Aleutians and Munda in the South Pacific were reported today by the navy.

The communique said:

"On March 18 Kiska was attacked twice by army Liberator and Mitchell bombers, with Lightnings as escorts. Results were not observed. All United States planes returned.

"On March 20 a force of Wildcat fighters strafed Japanese positions on Munda, New Georgia. All planes returned."

The raid on Munda was the 96th against that base in the central Solomons. The two attacks on Kiska were the 18th and 19th this month.

WARPLANES NOW IS PLEA VOICED BY MME. CHIANG

velvet jacket. Earrings of moonstones and silver shone from her ears, and a matching brooch was pinned at her neck. On one shoulder was the jeweled insignia of the Chinese air force.

Dr. Chen explained that custom forbade Mme. Chiang's being quoted directly [a policy followed with the President of the United States], but she smilingly said she was ready for questions. The first concerned her health. She said she was feeling so much better that, to borrow an Americanism, she felt high, wide, and handsome. [She looked tiny, slim, and of a porcelain fragility.]

The next concerned American supplies to China. Mme. Chiang said China wanted planes and more planes, and after that, munitions. How about bringing those in thru China's front door rather than its back door in Burma, she was asked. Thru the taking of a Chinese port now held by the Japanese?

Mme. Chiang looked puzzled. She said that presupposed that China had a navy, and China has no navy.

"But the United States has," the reporter continued hopefully.

Mme. Chiang laughed. She suggested that question be posed to the secretary of the navy.

In general her replies were short and succinct, but on one subject, Christianity, she spoke at length. This was in response to a question from a Galesburg [Ill.] publisher.

"I would like to know how you became a Christian," this lady said, "and how important you believe Christianity will be in the making of the post-war world?"

Mme. Chiang said she supposed she was born a Christian because her parents were Christians. She reflected silently a minute, and then added that she supposed that does not necessarily mean one is a Christian, does it?

Points to Christian Ideals.

She said she would not say she is a very good Christian today, but she would say that all who think and who have lived thru certain experiences must feel that Christian beliefs and ideals are the only ones that will save the post-war world. But, she added, she did not mean that certain ethical principles of other beliefs are outside the arena. She said they may be Christian without the name Christian.

"Madame," asked a man who introduced himself as a representative of the Negro press, "have you any greetings for the Negro people?"

Mme. Chiang regarded him thoughtfully. She said she saw no reason why there should be any differentiation between the Negro press and any other press. She asked if all were not Americans and if Americans were not a cauldron of democracy, made up of people clinging to and working for the same ideals.

Praises Salvation Army.

A Salvation Army writer leaned forward to ask how the Salvation Army is holding out in China. Mme. Chiang said it was doing fine work in Chungking caring for her pet interest, war orphans. [She added that she calls them "warphans."] She said one orphanage, which cares for recalcitrant adolescents, is operated entirely by the Salvation Army.

"We have tremendous supplies passing thru our hands," the Salvation Army writer continued. "We have failed to get any to you, but we would like to. Can we?"

Mme. Chiang thanked her, but explained that difficulties of transportation are so great that all available space now is needed to fulfill China's greatest need—planes and ammunitions. Mme. Chiang said that while her people need other things, they must take these things first if they are to shorten the war.

Needs Farming Machinery.

"What kind of farm machinery does China need?" Mme. Chiang said China needed machinery for small-scale farming rather than large tractors and machines for sowing and mowing miles of prairie.

"Do you expect any change in basic agriculture after the war?" she was asked.

She said no, unless it could be in northwestern China, which the government hopes to develop. She said that region contains fertile, smooth land good for grazing and farming, whereas most of the farm land now is terraced.

"Do you think the arrival of Anthony Eden in Washington has anything to do with postwar problems?" some one asked brightly.

Mme. Chiang laughed merrily. She said Mr. Eden had not consulted her about that, and she did not know.

Holds Force Necessary.

"What is your reaction to the senate proposal for an international police force?" she was asked. "Could that be applied to the far east?"

Mme. Chiang sighed a little and said she thought our experience has shown that with ideals one has to have force to implement those ideals. She said one must be careful to differentiate between force and brute force—that brute force is inhumane, but force is necessary. She asked where Chicago would be without its police force.

"What is the effect of the blockade on China?" came the next question.

Tears came to her eyes. She said it had thrust difficulties and hardships on her people in continuing the war. With every port city occupied by the enemy, China is cut off from the world, she said, accessible only by air.

"What measures has China taken to control inflation?" she was asked.

Holds Increases Unavoidable.

She said she had noticed that America has [groping for the next word] ceiling prices. She said that without doubt there is inflation in China, but China has been at war almost six years. The first three and a half years were without inflation, she said, but as more territory was occupied and as less transportation was available for the interchange of goods within the country, prices naturally went up.

Take any other country, she said—Russia—and one will find that prices have gone up. Even in America, she said, every one tells her prices have gone up and quality has deteriorated. She concluded that inflation is an unhappy but unavoidable adjunct of war, especially in an invaded country.

Earlier in the interview Mme. Chiang had directed that the consul general provide a chair for an elderly gentleman with a cane who was standing. He now spoke up, asking her opinion of an international board of arbitration to settle troubles in the post-war world.

"Remember our Jefferson," he added. "He said, 'Count 10 before you answer'."

Mme. Chiang asked his name before replying. She was told he was David Herriott, 2047 West 108th place, formerly a newspaper publisher.

Leaning toward him, she said softly that he had lived a long time and that she had not lived as long as he, but that there were certain times thru which both he and she had lived. Her dark eyes flashed, and her sentences were short and bitter as she recalled them to his mind:

There was Manchuria in 1931. There was such a board of arbitration as he suggested. It was called the Lytton commission. On it were representatives of Britain, France, Germany, and Italy. An observer from America sat on that board. It found out who was wrong. It found out what was wrong. And yet, she added with a quiet burst of passion, China lost Manchuria.

Questions Cover Wide Range.

From this disquieting question the interview shot rapidly to such heterogeneous topics as birth control, the Henry George single tax theory [which Madam did not have time to discuss] and Mrs. Roosevelt.

A lady writer whose mind was centered on birth control, altho she delicately termed it "planned parenthood," wanted to know what Madam thought of a movement on the part of 15 eastern industries to have lectures on the subject to intensify war materials production.

Madam was interested, seriously so, but she did not commit herself.

Sidelights on Mme. Chiang's Visit to Chicago

BY MARTHA MURPHY.

All Chicago came bearing gifts for Mme. Chiang Kai-shek yesterday. Only a few saw her. The rest, including a little girl carrying a doll sock filled with nickels and dimes, were turned away by the secret service.

The little girl was Abigail Ann Oleson, 10 years old, a pupil in Washington school, Downers Grove. "We girls talked for a long time about this money," Abigail Ann said as she waited patiently for word from Mme. Chiang. "We decided that if we were bombed we would rather have dolls than food. So I told Mme. Chiang in a long letter that we would like our money to buy toys for the Chinese boys and girls. We collected almost $6."

Abigail Ann's mother, Mrs. Richard Oleson, dressed an American doll for the children to send as a starter. After waiting more than an hour, Abigail Ann left. She said she was afraid of the policemen.

A hand illumination of a tribute to Mme. Chiang and the 26 Rotary clubs of China presented by representatives of the Rotary club of Chicago, caused Mme. Chiang to comment on the delicacy and beauty of Chinese brush work. She spoke nostalgically of the plum blossom which decorated one of the letters, pointing out that it is the national flower of China and blooms in adversity.

Nancy and Gloria Green, daughters of Gov. and Mrs. Green, have myriad reasons for remembering Mme. Chiang. They will cut classes tomorrow to hear her speak in the Stadium. Yesterday they and their parents had tea with Mme. Chiang.

None of the three children of Mr. and Mrs. Spencer T. Olin will ever forget the lovely lady of China. They hid shyly in a corner while their father, vice president of the Western Cartridge company, with a plant in East Alton, gave Mme. Chiang the billionth cartridge manufactured by his firm. Part of the company's production has gone to the Chinese army.

Mme. Chiang drew the children into the center of the room and, putting her arm around the youngest, Judy, 6 years old, asked each his age and grade in school. Each was given a flower. Mme. Chiang asked them to share a copy of her book, "A Letter to American Children," and to tell their mother that the box of Chinese sesame candy which she gave them contained vitamins.

An elevator hung constantly at the sixth floor, ready to take Mme. Chiang's party up or down. Once, when the car was crowded with dignitaries, the elevator man sang out, "Down we go. Short stop at Peking. Then on to Tokio." The Chinese laughed.

Mme. Chiang has a quick eye for the comfort of others. While newspaper photographers took their turn before the press conference she noticed that the only girl photographer present was being crowded out by the men. "Move, move, move," Mme. Chiang told one of the men. "Let the little girl have her chance."

Mme. Chiang constantly is accompanied by her nephew, L. E. K'ung, son of her brother-in-law, H. H. K'ung, a banker and lineal descendant of Confucius. Young Mr. K'ung, who is studying for a doctorate in political science at Harvard university, is serving as his aunt's secretary general. His sister, Miss L. T. K'ung, who accompanied Mme. Chiang from China, is her private secretary.

A. K. Chen, Mme. Chiang's chef, has accompanied her thruout the tour. Asked where Mr. Chen did his cooking, one of the members of the party explained that he sneaked into kitchenettes. Mme. Chiang's amah [maid], Mrs. Sze, also is a member of the party.

The silver wings which Mme. Chiang often wears indicate that she is a lieutenant general in the Chinese air force. She also was honorary commander of the American volunteer group, the Flying Tigers.

Chicago's Chinatown will be filled this morning with children's groups practicing songs and dances and older Chinese still scrubbing and polishing. Mme. Chiang will visit Chinatown at 5 p. m. today and it is expected that she will speak briefly in Chinese.

SEWER GAS BLAST IN INDIANAPOLIS BLACKS OUT CITY

Indianapolis, Ind., March 20 [Special].—Downtown Indianapolis was thrown into a nearly complete blackout tonight by an explosion of sewer gas which wrecked the main transformer in the downtown substation of the Indiana Power and Light company, cutting off all direct current from the area.

The blast shook the downtown district and splintered about 200 windows in the Central Parking garage at Illinois and Washington streets. Huge crowds assembled at this intersection and widespread confusion and traffic congestion took place in the darkness. No casualties were reported.

Downtown hotels were dark and elevators were out of service. Radio stations were off the air for several minutes. Motion picture theaters were darkened, but one stage show at the Circle theater continued its performance, using alternating current.

OLANDER BRANDS WMC JOB FREEZE PLAN 'PEONAGE'

Labor Chief Bares Move; Mayor Plans Appeal.

The war man power commission is attempting to impress a "peonage" system upon Chicago area labor, Victor F. Olander, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, asserted last night in baring the details of what he termed the WMC's job freezing program.

Olander was in the vanguard of labor leaders who assailed the WMC's decree last Thursday freezing Chicago area war contracts. He protested against the man power agency's summary action without consulting the local advisory committee representing labor and management.

Earlier, Mayor Kelly asserted he would wire Man Power Commissioner Paul V. McNutt urging him to rescind the war contract freeze order. The mayor declared Chicago has an ample labor supply and adequate transit facilities to expand war production.

Fears "Serfdom" Move.

Olander asserted that he made public the WMC's hirring control plan, a copy of which he reviewed at a meeting, because he feared it was a subtle attempt to reduce American labor to the status of "serfdom" found in totalitarian and feudal societies.

He said the plan has been rejected by the Chicago area advisory man power committee because of the unanimous objections of both the labor and management members.

The WMC program would halt all freedom of employers to hire workers they desire and end the freedom of workers to change jobs without restraint, Olander said. All private recruiting of workers would be halted and all hiring would have to be cleared thru the United States employment service, which would act as a central placement office, he asserted. Workers who want to quit one job and take another would first have to obtain a "certificate of availability" from their last employer.

List Terms for Certificates.

The certificate would be granted, Olander said, under these conditions:

1. If the employé is out of work for more than 30 days.
2. If the employé is not being utilized at his highest skill.
3. If he is working less than 40 hours a week.
4. If he lives too far from the plant, and can get work closer to home.
5. If his wages or working conditions are below prevailing standards or if he has other compelling personal reasons.

If the employer refuses to release the worker, the latter may appeal to the USES for a certificate, Olander explained, and may further appeal to the regional WMC director. The hiring controls would be applied to workers in essential classifications, which are broad.

Contract Freeze Pressure Seen.

Olander said the WMC plan was submitted Feb. 18 to the Chicago area advisory committee, which has refused to act upon it. He suggested that the recent WMC freeze on war contracts was imposed as pressure to force the committee into favorable action.

The AFL leader called the WMC program "slimy" and "underhanded." He said its adoption would turn the clock back on labor standards in this country.

"The worker can be held to his job or kicked out according to the will of his employer," Olander charged. "He has some slight chance of appeal against being tied to his job but none against being forced out. That's an arrangement not permitted even under serfdom in the dark ages."

Assails "Voluntary" Pretense.

Olander criticized the WMC's pretense at calling the plan voluntary. He said it was drafted by the WMC staff in Washington without public discussion or hearing. If a majority of the committee votes for it, it will be forced on millions of workers, he said.

"The WMC is under the impression that the American people will not coöperate unless threatened and forced into coöperation," he said. "Nowhere in the country has the WMC attempted to obtain a voluntary plan of labor-management coöperation."

He said that a voluntary program of labor stabilization and stimulation which he submitted to the WMC has not been given consideration. He explained that his program is entirely voluntary and depends on moral suasion and patriotism expressed thru churches, fraternal lodges, labor unions, newspapers, employer associations, civilian defense councils, and others.

Committee Declines Comment.

Members of the Chicago advisory man power committee declined to comment on Olander's revelation, asserting that they had pledged themselves to a gag rule which can be broken only when the entire committee agrees on a joint statement. At least three of the members are out of the city. However, it was learned that both labor and management members were unalterably opposed to the plan.

The committee is composed of the following:

For management—W. Homer Hartz, president of the Morden Frog and Crossing Works; Charles S. Craigmile, executive vice president of the Belden Manufacturing company; David Mayer, president of Maurice L. Rothschild, Inc., and George Williamson, president of the Williamson Candy company.

For labor—Gunnar Hallstrom, business manager of the Pattern Makers' union [AFL]; Charles Sand, secretary of the Carpenters' District Council of Chicago [AFL]; Sam Sponseller, chairman of the Packinghouse Workers' Organizing committee [CIO], and Ernest De Maio, international vice president of the United Electrical Radio and Machine Workers of America [CIO].

WMC Denies Pressure Charge.

The regional WMC office declared that the labor stabilization plan is not a job freezing program and denied that it is being forced upon employers and workers. It emphasized that the program is entirely voluntary and already has been adopted in Detroit, South Bend, Ind.; Springfield, and other areas to halt the disruption of the labor market by competitive bidding for labor and mad scrambling for better paying jobs.

The WMC explained that its program has not been a secret and has been offered publicly to labor and industry representatives in hundreds of industrial areas.

"Chicago has demonstrated that it is the leading arsenal and provisioner of the army and navy," Mayor Kelly said. "I am disturbed by the war man power commission's order stopping the placement of new war contracts in Chicago. I don't understand why such an order was necessary."

Will Ask Rescinding of Order.

The mayor said reports of private surveys indicated that Chicago does not face an acute labor shortage, that plenty of man power is available, and that transit facilities within the city are adequate. He asserted that he will ask McNutt to rescind last Thursday's order placing Chicago in Group II., which denotes an area where a labor shortage is expected within six months.

Meanwhile, man power officials continued to receive scores of protests against the WMC ruling, which also ordered a mandatory 48 hour work week for the Calumet area. William H. Spencer, regional WMC director, said objections to the WMC freeze order on war contracts and the blanket 48 hour work week may be filed with the WMC regional office at 222 West Adams street. Protests will be transmitted to the WMC staff in Washington. Machinery for the consideration of grievances will be established in the regional office shortly.

Talk Housing and Transit.

Housing and transportation shortages and their influence on labor supply continued to consume the attention of affected government agencies. Willard F. Day, regional representative of the national housing agency, was said to be in Washington, D. C., to submit an interim minimum program for the construction of new homes for war workers.

Earlier, Spencer indicated that altho the Chicago area has an over all numerical adequacy of labor, shortages of housing and transit facilities make it difficult to bring available labor close to war plants. Despite the importance of the transportation factor in the labor supply situation, the regional headquarters of the office of defense transportation has not acknowledged the problem and has taken no action.

4,000 CHAPLAINS NEEDED IN YEAR, ARMY REPORTS

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—The army needs approximately 4,000 chaplains by the end of 1943, Brig. Gen. William R. Arnold, chief of army chaplains, reported today.

"We are just about two months behind our procurement needs," he told a press conference. "If the number were available we could today assign 600 or more chaplains to duty."

Arnold said the number required included 3,028 Protestant, 959 Catholic, and 69 Jewish chaplains.

ASK WITHDRAWAL OF U.S. CONTRACT FREEZE IN CITY

Congressmen Meet, Call Order Disruptive.

Washington, D. C., March 20.—A study of the disruption of war production in Chicago and other Illinois industrial areas by the war man power commission's order freezing war contracts was begun today by the Illinois congressional delegation.

Republicans and Democrats from districts effected by the board's order met this morning in the office of Rep. Leo E. Allen [R., Ill.] to consider means of forcing the withdrawal of the order so Illinois industry will not be denied new war contracts.

The congressmen and Sen. Wayland Brooks [R., Ill.] met with James R. Donnelly, executive vice president of the Illinois Manufacturers' association, and W. Homer Hartz, president of the Morton Frog and Crossing works of Chicago, who is chairman of the association's advisory board and also a member of the WMC advisory board for the Chicago region.

Labor Shortage Claimed.

The WMC order reclassified a large section of Illinois, designating as "Group I." areas in which acute labor shortages exist and "Group II." areas where a labor shortage is expected in six months. Two other groups were designated for areas in which shortages are not anticipated or will not arise.

Most of the Greater Chicago area was classified in Group II., except for the Calumet area, which was put in "Group I."

"These designations were made arbitrarily by the war man power commission, without consultation of labor or industry," Rep. Allen said. "The designations are ridiculous in many cases.

War Production Periled.

"The halting of new contracts to the industrial areas will seriously curtail war production, which is essential to victory. The boundaries of such areas should not have been proscribed without deep consideration of the problems for each area and without consultation of those who know the problems of labor and industry.

"We of Illinois must be on guard against discriminations which the WMC order imposes. Unless we are on guard, Illinois post-war industry may be seriously injured by indiscriminate regimentation."

Donnelly and Hartz expressed the hope that relief will be won for Illinois from the WMC order.

"There is apparently a good deal of question as to whether the reclassifications should have been made," Donnelly said.

200 NORTH MICHIGAN AVENUE—AT LAKE STREET

CITY OF FLINT, SHIP SEIZED BY NAZIS, IS SUNK

Vessel Freed by Norway Torpedoed; 17 Lost.

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—The City of Flint, an American steamship which was the center of controversy in 1939 when it was seized by the Germans, has been torpedoed and sunk in the Atlantic.

The navy told today, in one of its usual announcements, of the sinking of "a small United States merchant ship" in the mid-Atlantic late in January, and later deviated from its policy to permit disclosure of its name—in this case the famous City of Flint.

Seventeen of the crew of 65 were lost. A survivor, Third Mate William Mills, 30 years old, of Milton, Mass., said in Philadelphia, Pa., that the ship was torpedoed early one evening without warning and was abandoned within 10 minutes after a fire started.

One Lifeboat Vanishes.

Twelve men apparently went down with the ship. Mills said four lifeboats, containing 53 men, were launched as flames roared thru the vessel, but that one of them, loaded with five men, never was seen afterward.

He said the vessel was blasted by a second explosion about 45 minutes after the attack, presumably from another torpedo, and sank almost immediately.

The remaining three lifeboats, with 16 men in each, stayed together at the scene of the sinking for two days, while the ship's radio operator sent out distress signals with a portable radio transmitter that he carried with him as he swam to a lifeboat. Survivors were picked up by a neutral ship on the third day.

Ship Seized in Atlantic.

On Oct. 9, 1939, soon after war began in Europe, the City of Flint was halted and seized in the Atlantic by a German warship.

The Germans put a prize crew aboard and the survivors of a British freighter which had been sunk a few days before. The prize crew painted out the American flag, hoisted a Danish one, put up a new name, the Alf, and steamed to Tromsoe, Norway, arriving there Oct. 20.

From Tromsoe the ship was sailed to Murmansk, Russia, and later turned up at Haugesund, Norway.

There the Norwegian government held it had anchored without valid reason and it was decided to intern the German crew and turn loose the vessel.

The Germans contended that the City of Flint, which was commanded by Capt. J. A. Gainard, was carrying contraband.

AAA allotment payments totaling $38,873,,553 to Illinois farmers had been approved up to yesterday, the Illinois agricultural conservation committee at Decatur announced. Of these, $23,254,575 were for 1942 parity allotments and $15,618,977 were for 1942 conservation allotments.

Payments were started last October and will be completed within another month or six weeks, according to Lee Gentry, committee chairman. The committee estimated that total parity payments would reach 27 million dollars and conservation payments will be nearly 19 millions.

Claims are cleared by counties thru the committee's Decatur office and then forwarded to the disbursing branch of the treasury department at St. Louis, where the checks are mailed.

WINCHELL RETRACTION DEMANDED BY NAVAL MOTHERS' TELEGRAM

The Navy Mothers' Club of Chicago yesterday telegraphed a demand to Walter Winchell, gossip columnist, that he retract an accusation made in a broadcast March 14 that the club had "adopted" an alleged pro-Nazi draft evader, Joseph E. McWilliams.

"Because of previous publicity, Chicago navy mothers are well aware of Joe McWilliams' character and resent the implication in last Sunday's broadcast," the telegram said. "McWilliams visited our office several times in the last few weeks and left literature; federal authorities were immediately informed of each visit and given the literature," the telegram added.

Winchell declared the club was "mothering" the Utopian post-war plannings of McWilliams, whose seditious activities have been probed by a federal grand jury and who was arrested in 1942 for draft evasion.

The navy mothers said that federal officials asked them to permit McWilliams to continue his visits so a thoro and secret investigation could be made.

Fort Wayne, Ind., March 10 [Special].—Tabulation of the first 1,000 ballots cast in the Fort Wayne News-Sentinel's statewide Presidential preference poll of Republican precinct committeemen showed 918 opposed and 82 favoring the 1944 nomination of Wendell Willkie, the newspaper said today.

Anti-Willkie precinct leaders indicated their first choices for the nomination as follows: Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, 39 per cent; Gov. John W. Bricker of Ohio, 37 per cent, and Sen. Robert A. Taft of Ohio, 18 per cent. The remaining 6 per cent was scattered among Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg [R., Mich.], Herbert Hoover, Alfred M. Landon, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, and Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker.

The newspaper said the first 1,000 replies to a question, "Do you favor the United States mixing extensively in foreign politics after this war?" brought 887 negative and 113 affirmative answers.

COLOR PRINTING IN TRIBUNE WINS AUSSIE TRIBUTE

Pointing out that when THE TRIBUNE in its 50th anniversary edition of 46 years ago inserted two color pages, printed in a job shop, it was regarded as "unprecedented newspaper enterprise," Newspaper News, leading Australian journalistic publication, devoted a column and a half in its issue of Feb. 1 to the gigantic strides being made by THE TRIBUNE in colorgravure. "Today," it said, THE TRIBUNE "claims to print more color than any other newspaper in the world."

"More newspaper color history was made on June 9, 1939," Newspaper News continued, "when a big color photograph of President and Mrs. Roosevelt greeting the king and queen of England in Washington was transmitted by wirephoto and appeared in THE TRIBUNE. On May 12, 1939, the paper claimed the first use of color in spot news photography by printing a superb color picture of a four million dollar grain fire.

"THE TRIBUNE uses the first portable three plate color camera which snaps pictures at the same shutter speeds as cameras that record only black and white. The studio has its own processing rooms in which are performed chemical operations so delicate that the room temperature must be scientifically controled." Newspaper News then continued by quoting in full a detailed Chicago Tribune story of the transposition of a color photograph to a color page in the newspaper.

Can you qualify as a WAAC? It isn't difficult if you are physically fit, of average intelligence, and between the ages of 21 and 44, inclusive. You need no high school diploma.

Perhaps your husband, brother or sweetheart is in there fighting for our way of life. You can back him up, bring him home sooner by joining the WAAC.

Good food and plenty of it. WAAC meals are most appetizing, well-balanced. Any WAAC will tell you "the food and training you get make you feel like a new woman."

WAAC assignments include working with officers and enlisted men at Army Posts, Camps, Airfields, etc. Trim uniforms, all accessories are furnished WAAC enrollees.

Auxiliaries obtain data on wind direction, air density, etc., to be used by gunnery personnel. WAACs are specially trained for many important, interesting jobs.

Time out for fun! Pleasant, wholesome companions and a well-furnished recreation room make WAAC evenings go quickly. There are regular dances, too, for WAAC and soldier personnel.

Read These Questions and Answers!

1. Who can join?
Any woman—21 thru 44—married or single, regardless of race, creed or color, who is an American citizen.

2. What about soldiers' wives?
Soldiers' wives who join the WAAC continue to receive Army pay allotments for husbands in service, as well as regular WAAC pay.

3. What are the jobs?
WAACs do all kinds of jobs. Here are a few: aircraft spotter, camera technician, chauffeur, motor dispatcher, musician, photographer, parachute packer, radio operator, truck driver, weather observer, and countless other jobs. You may request the type of work you prefer to do as a WAAC. Insofar as is possible, your requests will be granted.

4. No high school diploma required.
No. WAAC enrollees are chosen on the basis of a mental alertness test which any woman of average intelligence can easily pass. It is not necessary for applicants to have a high school or college diploma.

5. What about physical requirements?
Any woman in good health, with good vision and hearing, can pass the WAAC physical examination.

6. Any special training required?
None at all. If you have special talents, they will be utilized, of course. Yet if you are utterly unskilled now, you still can do an important job for the army, and when peace comes you will return to civilian life better trained, healthier, more alert and responsible.

7. What about promotions?
All WAAC officers are now chosen from the ranks. If you enlist today and show leadership qualities, or special abilities, your chances of becoming an officer are excellent. The Corps is rapidly expanding. Many WAACs are needed for Officers' Training School.

8. Foreign service opportunities?

GUNFIRE SWELLS ANTI-GANG VOTE, SAYS M'KIBBIN

Bares Alliance with City Hall, He Asserts.

Heavy voting at the April city election is assured because of public indignation over "the alliance of the city hall with underworld crime syndicates," George B. McKibbin yesterday told a meeting of independent leaders aiding in his campaign for mayor. McKibbin said the gangland shooting of Edward [Spike] O'Donnell and the suicide of Frank [The Enforcer] Nitti has focused public attention on this alliance.

"The bullet that wounded Spike O'Donnell on Monday and the self-inflicted wound that ended the career of Frank Nitti on Friday forcibly reminded the voters that the taxpayers and the reputation of our city alike are suffering because of the gangsters' deals with higher-ups in the Kelly machine," McKibbin declared.

Allies of Carozzo.

"Both the noisy O'Donnell, who boasted of his friendship with the mayor and claimed that he had beaten up Kelly's superintendent of streets in the city hall, and Nitti, whose activities extended from brothels and gambling joints to the control of labor unions seized by force, were allies of the late Mike Carrozzo. Chicago has not forgotten the operations of that hoodlum who, beginning as the head of the streetcleaners' union, amassed a fabulous fortune thru extortion from unions, from paving firms and contracts, and from control of garbage dumps used by the city.

"Chicago's brave policemen, who daily risk their lives in the protection of our citizens, will not forget the boast of Carrozzo when the mayor cut the pay of policemen, that the city hall did not dare cut the streetcleaners, and that the whitewings in his union actually were making more money per day than the policemen.

"Not Going by Default."

"With our businessmen, our honest union men and their leaders, and all classes of citizens thus aroused, the mayoral election is not going to go by default as the Kelly leaders have so confidently hoped. Every report indicates that despite our paramount interest in the war, men and women of Chicago now are aware of the importance of this election."

Morgan L. Fitch, former president of the Chicago Real Estate board and Republican candidate for city treasurer, told members of the Victory for Fitch committee yesterday that a recent survey showed more than 1,000 industrial units, plants and small factories idle in Chicago "altho America has been at war for more than a year."

Sees Burocratic Bungling.

"These vacant industrial units in America's second largest city demonstrate clearly the burocratic bungling in war production," Fitch declared.

Increased radio campaigning will mark the 16 remaining days of the vote drive by McKibbin workers. Starting at 8:45 p. m. tonight when a research committee of lawyers will speak on "Has He Made a Good Mayor," McKibbin or his campaigners will be on the air at least once each night.

Democrats End Series of Meetings.

With the city election two weeks from next Tuesday, Mayor Kelly yesterday concluded a series of four meetings with party workers by telling nearly 1,000 Democratic precinct captains of wards 13 to 24, gathered in the Morrison hotel, that he was "especially proud" of the united support of the Democratic organization in Chicago.

"I want to make it clear right now that as far as this organization is concerned," the mayor declared, "it has never asked me to do anything that I couldn't do in sight of a rush hour crowd at State and Madison streets.

"It is unfortunate for Chicago's reputation," he said, "that every four years, there must be those who think it necessary, in order to try for political preferment, to tear down Chicago's good name. We have 900 conventions in Chicago every year, and those folks wouldn't come here if we were as bad as some of the detractors paint us.

"Want No Crepe Hanging."

"This is a big, liberal city, where we speak 62 different dialects and are all Americans. We want to see people enjoy themselves. We want no crêpe hanging on the doors."

The meetings of precinct leaders during the week were called to combat overconfidence within the organization and in each meeting Mayor Kelly asked Democratic workers to solicit votes of their neighbors, "Republicans and Democrats alike."

"We have striven consistently to build up Chicago, and we have supported the war effort to maintain the nation," Mayor Kelly said. "Our fight has been for the man in the street. Where we have been able to alleviate distress, to appease suffering and to offer a fuller life, we have done so.

Aim: "Finest City in World."

"We have aimed to be humane—to make Chicago the finest city in the world in which to live and raise a family. These objectives we have pursued by making Chicago the world's healthiest big city, by redeeming the municipal credit and the city's reputation for integrity and a high order of morality, by maintaining educational and recreational facilities at a high level, and by creating employment opportunities thru the encouragement of industrial expansion.

"There is still, of course, much to be done and it is because I want to complete the job this administration started, that I am a candidate for reëlection.

"Any man has a right to run for mayor, and I don't contend that there aren't citizens capable of doing a better job. I don't agree, however, that any of these folks of superior qualifications are now in the race."

Warns of Late Appeals.

James J. McDermott, member of the board of tax appeals and committeeman of the 14th ward, presided, and warned precinct captains to be "on guard against last minute appeals by the opposition."

"They will try," he declared, "to stir up passion and prejudice, and we must be viligant against such un-American tactics. The administration of Mayor Kelly has known no race, creed or color, and instead of trying to set one section of the city against the other, the opposition would be better occupied if it would explain why Gov. Green doesn't reduce the 2 per cent sales tax, which has built up a $52,000,000 surplus of idle dollars in the state treasury."

CLOSE BELMONT BRIDGE TODAY.

The Belmont avenue bridge at Rockwell street will be closed to traffic from 5 a. m. to 5 p. m. today because of repair work, W. W. DeBerard, city engineer, announced yesterday.

BRICKER CALLS FOR ACTION IN FARMS CRISIS

Columbus, O., March 20 (AP).—Gov. John W. Bricker said today he would recommend that the Ohio legislature memorialize congress for immediate action on resolutions adopted by 11 midwestern governors outlining steps they believed the federal government should take if agriculture is to meet record food production demands in 1943.

Bricker, a potential Republican Presidential candidate, said in a formal statement the conference at Des Moines, Ia., last Monday simply surveyed the farm labor and machinery situation and left to the attending governors how best to put the conclusions into effect back home.

TESTIFIES VOTE 'BOSS' TOOK BETS IN POLLS PLACE

Watcher Tells of Threats at Senate Quiz.

How a Democratic precinct captain combined his election day duties as a watcher with that of a bookie, taking bets from men and women coming in to vote, was told by a witness appearing yesterday before a state senate subcommittee investigating alleged vote frauds in the 1st ward. The incident was described as occurring in the 2d precinct polling place.

The witness, Miss Mary V. Neff, 3827 Pine Grove avenue, a senior law student employed by Atty. Gen. George F. Barrett, said the man was identified to her only as "Crawford" and that she was balked in an attempt to learn his full name.

As a watcher for the Business Men's committee, Miss Neff said she objected to the gambling sideline conducted by "Crawford," but was told very roughly to mind her own business or she'd "get in real trouble." "Crawford," she said, dominated the polling place, appointing his own watchers at will.

Objected to Democratic Clerk.

Her first run-in with "Crawford," Miss Neff testified, came when she objected to appointment of a Democrat to fill the place of a Republican clerk who failed to show up for the election. She was threatened, she said, but nevertheless notified the election commissioners.

The commissioners sent an investigator, Miss Neff told the committee, but "Crawford" refused to let him see the precinct records. After a talk with "Crawford" the investigator left.

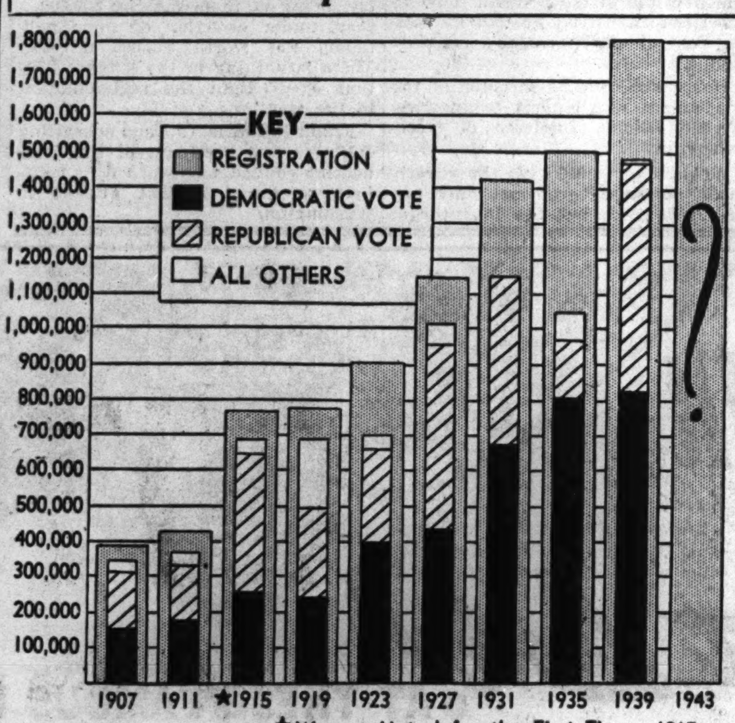
Testimony of 11 hotel managers in the 1st ward followed. All told of men who registered in their hotels just previous to the election, voted from there and left after the election was over.

Recount Asked By Neff.

The senate investigation was instigated when Hobart E. Neff—no relation to the witness yesterday—demanded a recount of the 1st ward ballots. Neff, a Republican, lost the senate election to his Democratic rival, Lawrence E. Dowd. Neff contends he actually won by several thousand votes. The official count showed him the loser by 769 votes.

Members of the committee are Sen. Walker Butler of Chicago and Sen. Wallace R. Thompson of Galesburg, Republicans, and Sen. Thomas E. Keane. They will meet again at the Chicago Bar association Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

A Political Dopester's Form Chart



The election statistics for past municipal balloting in Chicago, with the registration for this year's election.

How good are you as a political prophet?

The diagram above gives you the total registration, the total vote cast, and the vote of each nominee for mayor by party for all the nominees in all the mayoral elections since 1907. In addition, the last column shows this year's registration before the primary of Feb. 23, which will be only slightly exceeded by the total registration for the election two weeks from next Tuesday.

In the primary the total vote cast was 818,205, which was 45.85 per cent of the registration. The Democratic total was 597,805 and the Republican was 220,400. In the 1939 mayoral election 81.82 per cent of the registered vote was cast.

Roosevelt Has a Cold, Cancels Labor Meeting

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—Because of a slight cold, President Roosevelt today postponed an engagement with labor leaders protesting the war labor board's continued use of the "little steel" formula in passing on wage increases.

OPERA CIRCLES TALK OF LINKING CHICAGO TO MET

Season Opens Tomorrow; $100,000 Advance Sale.

BY CLAUDIA CASSIDY.

Chicago opera circles are seething with speculation about rumors that the Chicago Opera company plans to combine in some fashion with the Metropolitan Opera association, which arrives tomorrow 300 strong to open its first Chicago engagement in 33 years. Its two weeks season of 14 performances in the Civic Opera house already has piled up an advance sale in excess of $100,000. When the Chicago Opera's season of five weeks opened last fall it had a combined advance sale and subscription of approximately $80,000.

There is no doubt that Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan, who arrives in Chicago today, cherishes a dream of making the Metropolitan a national opera company. He told me this a year ago when his troupe was on tour, and he reiterated the hope when he was here last month to complete negotiations for the Chicago season opening tomorrow night with Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro."

Desires Training Companies.

Mr. Johnson, long a leading tenor of Chicago and Ravinia as well as Metropolitan opera, believes young opera singers for a great national opera company should be developed by training companies in smaller key cities. He dwells on the past glories of Chicago opera and stresses the central location of Chicago as a nerve center from which lifelines of music could sprout and spread over the country. He underscores the development of operatic ensemble to replace the old star system.

It is worth noting that people who attend Metropolitan performances in Chicago will receive identical souvenir programs, each listing the complete repertory of 13 operas and 14 casts, illustrated with photographs of singers in costume. There are only two advertisments in this program. One is that of the company which sponsors the Saturday matinée broadcasts [and paid the Met $136,750 for the privilege last season] and the other is that of the company which makes the radio auditions possible. All of which goes a long way to bolster Mr. Johnson's contention that big business has replaced the great families of older days as the "angel" of opera.

Same Stars in Three Cities.

There is, of course, a practical side to the Metropolitan's desire for expansion. The longer the season the more advantageous the bargaining position. "Essentially," said Mr. Johnson, "Chicago, New York, and San Francisco employ the same major artists. Why not admit it, and pool resources and investments? Chicago did just that when it opened its 1941 season with the Metropolitan's production of 'The Daughter of the Regiment,' using our costumes and scenery as well as our stars. By forming a national opera company we could divide the cost of new productions. For instance, in our present visit, we are able to bring Chicago fully rehearsed productions, previously prepared for New York."

What is Chicago's reaction to all this? It divides sharply between those people who consider the Metropolitan engagement a pleasant visit, those who believe the Metropolitan should take over in Chicago, and those who resent the whole idea as inimical to the future of Chicago opera. However, a cross section of official operatic opinion is highly favorable to the importation.

Up to Chicago, Stilwell Says.

Speaking for the 20 Wacker Drive Building corporation, which now owns the former assets of Chicago resident opera, James C. Thompson and Abner J. Stilwell expressed themselves as delighted with the Metropolitan's engagement, and interested in its implications. Asked about the possibility of the Metropolitan's return to Chicago, Mr. Stilwell said, "It all depends on the way Chicago responds to this engagement. If the people of Chicago really want the Metropolitan, we can't keep it from them, can we?"

Questioned about the possibility of a Chicago Opera merger with the Metropolitan, Mr. Thompson chuckled and inquired, "What has the Chicago Opera got to merge with? Some old paper clips, a few extra pencils, some scratch pads, and last year's stationery?" Altho the Metropolitan Opera owns its scenery, costumes, and properties and, with the aid of radio's bounty, its own building, Chicago opera lost all those things in the crash of the Insull empire. Nevertheless, Mr. Thompson insisted, the building corporation invited the Metropolitan to Chicago only after it had called a meeting of the Chicago Opera directors, who voted almost unanimously to extend the invitation. The building corporation, meanwhile, has given the Metropolitan the same terms of Civic Opera house occupation enjoyed by the Chicago Opera.

Suggests Future Possibilities.

Speaking for the building corporation, Mr. Thompson welcomed the Metropolitan as a guest, and said he hopes to continue Chicago Opera in the fall. He remarked that it may be admitted that at present Chicago lacks the operatic resources to compete in the big league, but might continue as a minor league, asking lower prices. He also suggested the possibility, no doubt more attractive to Chicagoans, that closer relations between the two companies would help in a practical way.

For instance, the Metropolitan pays no star more than $1,000 a performance, yet many stars ask Chicago from $1,500 up to Lily Pons' $3,500. Mr. Thompson said he believes the Met might be persuaded to relax its prior claims on the artists' time, thus easing Chicago's booking and rehearsal problems.

Speaking for the Chicago Opera company's board of directors, both Robert Hall McCormick, chairman of trustees, and William D. Saltiel, secretary of the executive officers, expressed their pleasure at the Metropolitan engagement, and said that Chicago Opera plans its own regular season next fall, again with Fortune Gallo as general director. Mr. Gallo is now in New York, booking his San Carlo Opera troupe.

Favors Preserving Identity.

Mr. McCormick said that he is particularly interested in a form of operatic consolidation which would achieve the advantages of a touring circuit in the matter of shared overhead, but which would in no way detract from the identity of the Chicago Opera. He said that he was well content with Mr. Gallo's direction of the Chicago company last season.

Mr. Saltiel expressed interest in the Metropolitan season and the hope that plans for the Chicago Opera season next fall might get under way at once to facilitate the signing of suitable contracts. He suggested that the advance sale for the Metropolitan's three Mozart operas might stimulate Chicago to more adventurous repertory, and added the hope that eventually an improved and longer Chicago season could tempt a lucrative radio contract. Meanwhile, he added, the Chicago company must negotiate a new contract with the American Guild of Musical Artists.

Views of Kirk and Weber.

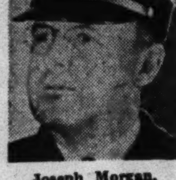
Since all seemed harmonious on the present operatic front, I extended my inquiries to Walter R. Kirk, who was president, and Henry Weber, who was artistic director, during the season of 1940, when we had the best Chicago Opera season in at least 10 years.

"I think bringing the Metropolitan to Chicago is a grand scheme," said Mr. Kirk, adding that he made a similar proposal when he headed the company, believing that a suitable combination of Chicago and Metropolitan resources would assure Chicago of adequately rehearsed, soundly financed, and otherwise attractive opera.

Mr. Weber said it will be interesting for Chicago to have the Metropolitan season, but said he remains convinced that the future of opera in America lies in stock company production of the European type, with less specialization, more emphasis on utility singers, and greater development of ensemble. He is convinced that opera must be sung in English to survive.

ST. LOUIS FIRE CHIEF DIES IN COLLAPSE OF BURNING BUILDING

St. Louis, Mo., March 20 (AP).—Fire Chief Joseph W. Morgan was killed today and nine members of his department were injured when a burning warehouse collapsed.



Joseph Morgan.

Four firemen who had been standing on the roof fell with it to the basement, but only three required hospitalization.

Morgan, who was 52 years old, was killed when he went into the building to warn other firemen to come out.

ENGINEERS FIGHT PATENT BILLS AS 'COMMUNISTIC'

Members of the Illinois Engineering council yesterday denounced senate bills introduced by Sen. Harley M. Kilgore [D., W. Va.] providing for the creation of an "office of scientific and technical mobilization" as "dangerous and absurd."

The council, meeting in the Engineering building, 205 West Wacker drive, assailed the proposed legislation as "communist regimentation" which would strike a death blow to America's industrial growth by seizing control of the nation's research genius.

Harry McCormack, director of the department of chemical engineering of the Illinois Institute of Technology, said:

"This plan would give the government power to grab not only any new invention, but the inventor as well and put him to work for the government. The bills would put all the research engineers of the country, many of them making $50,000 a year, under direction of some politician, not worth $12,000 a year. There is nothing in the Kilgore bills that would limit the regimentation to the war."

Frank F. Fowle, Chicago consulting engineer and president of the engineering council, also warned its members to guard against attacks in Washington.

9 KILLED, 16 HURT AS TRAIN HITS BUS AT CROSSING

Wreckage Is Strewn 100 Feet Along Tracks.

Granite City, Ill., March 20 (AP).—Nine persons were killed and 16 were injured today when an electric train demolished a bus at a grade crossing.

The bus had almost cleared the crossing at the moment an Illinois Terminal railroad train sent it whirling toplike, smashed its front, and rammed its shattered chassis between two rows of telephone poles. Bodies and wreckage were strewn for 100 feet.

A warrant charging the bus driver, Emmett Warden of Granite City with manslaughter was issued tonight by Justice of the Peace William B. Curtiss on complaint of Assistant State's Attorney Fred Schuman. Warden was released on $5,000 bond for a hearing Wednesday.

Confused by Oncoming Bus.

He said he had stopped the bus 30 feet from the crossing and that an oncoming bus obscured his vision as he drove up an incline to the crossing.

All the dead and 14 of the injured were on the bus. Two train passengers were injured slightly, altho the three car interurban remained on the tracks and continued its run after a slight delay.

"I've been thru three of these things," said Tollof Stromlund, who lives near the crossing, "and this is the worst I ever saw."

Stromlund and his wife were the first to reach the bus, and they helped extricate nearly a score of passengers while neighbors called ambulances. Stromlund said five bodies were thrown from the bus into an adjoining field.

Twin Sisters Injured.

Mrs. Goldie Farrar, 16 years old, of Granite City, and her twin sister, Sylvia Bobo of Nameoki, were found wandering battered and dazed after the crash.

Eight of the dead were identified. They were Lois Prazma, 4 months old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Prazma of Venice; Henry Nyboer of Nameoki, civics teacher at Granite City Community High school, and his daughter, Jacqueline, 7; Mrs. George Montgomery, 33, Granite City, and her son, George, 15; Norma Todd, 18, Nameoki; Benjamin B. Lundy, 63, Venice, and Mrs. Paul K. Yates, Nameoki.

Corydon, Ind., March 20 (AP).—Rising waters in southern Indiana today claimed the lives of two men, forced more than 100 families to evacuate their homes and closed more than 30 roads to traffic. Neighbors found the bodies of Clarence Gonterman, 40 years old, and Roy Mauck, 35, in the Gonterman home here. It was believed the men perished when waters from Big Indian and Little Indian creeks rose to a record high Friday. The water system in Corydon was damaged by high water and the city was without its usual supply tonight.

FIRE ROUTS 25 FROM FLATS.

Fire drove 25 persons from a six flat brick apartment building at 6437-39 Drexel avenue last night. Damage was $1,500.

New Type Mine Sweeper Launched

Launching ceremony at the Grebe shipyards on the north branch of the Chicago river yesterday. The vessel is a new type mine sweeper. Mrs. William Amos, wife of a welder at the yards, cracked the champagne bottle over the vessel's prow.

CIVILIANS LEARN HOW GOBS LIVE ON MINESWEEPER

Another mine sweeper was eased into the north branch of the Chicago river at the Grebe ship yards yesterday and the navy for the first time permitted civilians to peek and pry into a mine sweeper's innards and admire the way luxuries of land are combined with hardships of sea.

Lt. Comm. E. U. Titus, navy supervisor at the yards at 3250 North Washtenaw avenue conducted newspapermen on a tour of one of the completed 135 foot ships—the first of a new type.

Among the luxuries pointed out for the tourists were showers for officers and men, innerspring mattresses and coil springs for the officers, neat red draperies for portholes, steam heat in all rooms, two big refrigerators, a drinking fountain known to seamen as a scuttlebutt, and a fan, known as a charley noble, for blowing out the odors of broiling steaks from the kitchen.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Sullivan of Waterloo, Ia., whose five sons were lost on the cruiser Juneau, and their daughter, Genevieve, 25 years old, spoke at the launching ceremony. Then Mrs. William Amos, 3652 North avenue, whose husband, a welder at the yards, won her the job in a lottery, smacked a bottle of champagne on the newest mine sweeper and it crept down the ways into the river.

ARMY PROHIBITS 'V' MAIL EDITIONS BY NEWSPAPERS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., March 20.—The war department today ruled against "V" mail editions of newspapers. Newspapers distributing such editions will receive instructions shortly to abandon them.

The department originally had encouraged papers to print weekly news digests for shipment to soldiers overseas by their relatives and friends.

The postoffice department objected to the editions on the ground that they increased the burden of mail and were not permitted under the law authorizing "V" mail. The department said the law barred commercialization of "V" mail. This type of mail frequently is photographed and is rushed overseas in the form of a miniature photographic negative to save space, being enlarged and reproduced on reaching its destination.

Drive for Cruiser Bonds Over Quota on 32d Day

Oscar G. Mayer, executive chairman of the Chicago cruiser committee of the treasury department, reported yesterday that war bond purchases pledged to the construction of a new cruiser Chicago totaled $1,116,881.25 yesterday, bringing the 40-day drive over its quota on the 32d day. The total received so far is $32,059,620.50, he said, and yesterday's bond sales topped the million dollar mark for the fourth day in a row.

HINES HOME HINTS

PUBLISHED EVERY WEEK BY THE 22 HINES YARDS IN CHICAGO AND SUBURBS

MANY PEOPLE WILL RAISE CHICKENS

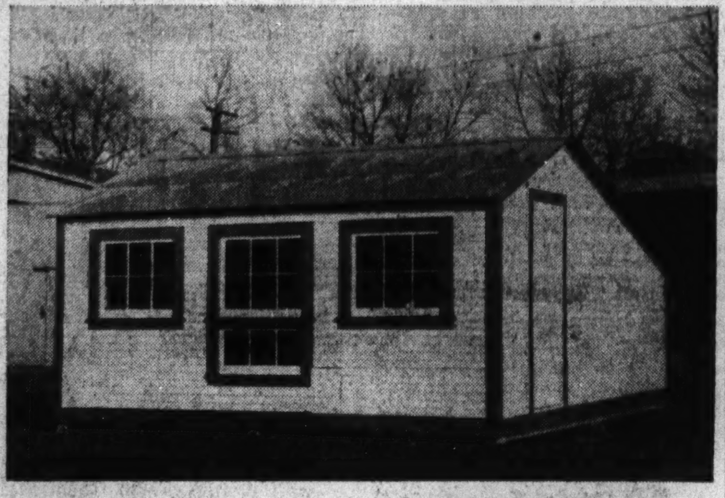
In response to the many requests for information on chicken houses, and the wide interest in chicken raising, Hines has enlisted the aid of Mr. Raymond T. Smith of Golf, Illinois—one of the nation's most noted authorities on poultry husbandry. Mr. Smith has made poultry breeding a lifetime hobby, and has won international fame with his Superfine White Plymouth Rocks—consistent winners at leading poultry shows.

The poultry house, pictured at right, is a design endorsed and used by Mr. Smith, and it incorporates not only the results of his wide experience but also the studies of several leading agricultural authorities. It is devoid of fancy frills and is streamlined to conserve materials and labor needed in the war effort, so that those who want to increase the nation's meat and egg supply may do so at a minimum of expense and a maximum of satisfaction.

COMES IN SECTIONS

With this house you can raise chickens with little work, and be assured of your own egg and meat supply. The house is designed so that it is easy to keep clean, and is constructed to exclude vermin. Hines Chicken Houses are completely prefabricated by experienced union craftsmen using quality materials. The sides come in one piece with doors and windows all prefitted and set in place. The floor and roof sections are prefabricated also, and it's only a matter of a few hours' work to set this house up on your property. It is so simple to put together that you can do this work, or Hines can arrange to have reliable contractors do it for you at modest cost. Hines Chicken Houses are available in three sizes: the largest house is 14 ft. wide and 16 ft. deep and is an ideal size for both the professional and the amateur. The second size is 10 ft. wide and 16 ft. deep, and the smallest size measures 8 ft. wide and 12 feet deep. All three houses are expressly designed to insure the best results; and favorable financing is available, too, with up to three years to pay on easy monthly terms with no money down.

HINES PREFABRICATED CHICKEN HOUSE



Hines Prefabricated Poultry House is not only efficient, but it is good-looking, too, as you can see from the picture of the 14' by 16' size photographed at our Glenview Yard. There are two other smaller sizes available, and all houses can be purchased on the FHA plan with no money down and as little as $5 per month.

CHICAGOAN TELLS GLOWING SAGA OF MIGHTY WARSHIP

Atlanta's Story a Tribute to Fighting Seamen.

listed men who are doing jobs as magnificently as any ever done. But only their shipmates will realize it.

The faces change, but the characteristics do not as you go from one station to another. Senior officers and experienced enlisted men are constant builders of inspiration and efficiency in newly named officers. For that reason, any story of the navy must typify its spirit.

This spirit is objective and result producing; not sensational or personal. The navy expresses itself in short, conservative communiques, telling of enemy ships sunk and enemy positions taken.

Whole Story Can't Be Told.

Some of the results told in these communiques, the Atlanta helped produce. Yet the story of a ship is more than the story of one or several men. Thus, the story of the Atlanta and the few other ships whose records have been revealed is far short of being the story of our navy in the Pacific. Those men of war you read of are not hero ships. They are typical ships.

Fighting cruisers like the Northhampton, old "Nora Maru," the gallant Chicago, and the Vincennes carried the war to the Japs long before the Atlanta had a chance to see action. Unsung, far ranging destroyers like our old traveling companion U. S. S. Benham, have won unheralded, but undying fame in navy annals. Scores of ships from tankers to carriers are at the front now. But until the war is won it is imperative that they sail and fight behind a shield of secrecy.

Atlanta's Story a Typical One.

This story is written for the reader who has a son, brother, or a friend on a ship that has fought or is fighting the war. For the Atlanta's record and experiences are not exceptional; they are typical of today's men of war.

I have been in two navies. The first was the peace time navy where I spent most of my time ashore, learning the traditions and ideals of the men with whom I was going to fight. The second has been the seagoing navy in war time. I have traveled 75,000 miles with that outfit, dodging submarines in the Atlantic and cruising eventually in the big, blue waste of water that is the Pacific.

I remember the grim picture of Pearl Harbor last spring, where the tragedy of Dec. 7, 1941, was seared into our minds by the scorched and oily scum on the beaches and wharves and by the fire-gutted hulls of the battleships of the Pacific fleet and the destroyers Shaw, Cassin, and Downes.

Joins Carrier Task Force.

Shortly afterward we joined the hard sailing carrier task forces which had just finished raiding the Japanese mandated islands from Marcus and Jaluit to the Coral sea, and from bringing reënforcements to America's South Pacific bases.

We were proud to join "Halsey's Horse Marines" and to sail under an admiral whose nickname is "Fighting Bill." We were proud to go on answering the question: "Where is the navy?"

Early in June, 1942, we sailed with these same carrier task forces into the thunder and smoke of Midway. And when the battered hulks of the Japanese navy turned back toward Tokio, there no longer was a question: "Where is the navy?" The battle which was the turning point in the naval war in the Pacific had been fought.

Many Tactics Practiced.

Then to the Solomons. For a long time our ships had been practicing coastal bombardments; practicing shooting down dive bombers, torpedo planes, and high level bombers. We had thrown shells and flares in mock battles at night. But all hands had had their fill of dummy runs. And the marines were getting hungry for Japs.

So an American armada steamed out of the southern islands, thru the Coral sea toward Guadalcanal. The Stars and Stripes were raised over an air field named in honor of Maj. Lofton R. Henderson, a marine corps hero who gave his life in the battle of Midway. In the next two months the bloodiest land fighting of the war was to develop on that island.

At the end of these actions in the Solomons there could be no doubt in the mind of Hirohito that American fighting men were on their way to Honshu, the island upon which are situated Tokio and Yokohama.

And if Hirohito has a copy of Fahey's "Ships and Aircraft of the United States Fleet" he knows this: That 15 battleships, more than a score of aircraft carriers and cruisers like the six Alaskas, eight Baltimores, and 32 Clevelands, with hundreds of destroyers and supporting ships, are coming out to assist him in remembering Pearl Harbor. My shipmates who survived will be on those vessels.

And who were my shipmates? Who were the men of the Atlanta? Where were they two or three years ago? What were they in civilian life?

Seeks an Education.

I will try to tell in the installments that follow how we trained, practiced, and prepared for meeting the enemy and how we felt when first we went into battle. So that you may better understand the transition from civilian life to life in the United States navy, I will tell something of my own experiences, because they are the experiences of thousands of American boys now at sea—from the Solomons to Casablanca; from the Aleutians to Murmansk.

I have lived in Chicago all my life.

[Acme Photo.]

Maj. Lofton R. Henderson, after whom the Guadalcanal airfield was named. He was killed in the Battle of Midway.

The Sisters of Mercy helped me thru parochial school and in 1937 I was graduated from an academy conducted by the Jesuits. In that year—since funds were scarce and I wanted to get a head start in the advertising business—I started selling advertising while attending a Jesuit university.

I always had thought of education as a means to making a well rounded man of myself and to appreciation of art, history, philosophy, and the other fields which make life interesting. My work as an advertising salesman I regarded as preparing me for a worthwhile career.

Entering college in the fall of 1937, I got an evening job. My school hours varied, but the job required 40 hours a week so I was on the go usually from 7 a. m. to about midnight. There wasn't much time for social life, but beers with classmates at Sieben's brewery and "Bavaria," west of Evanston, and occasional dates were mighty pleasant.

Service Career Looms.

In my first year in college I took a little Spanish, because in the back of my head was the idea I wanted to sell advertising to help build Latin American trade. I was on the swimming team all the way thru school and this was my principal recreation. Swimming and working as a life guard on Chicago's beaches between my junior and senior years in high school were about the only forewarnings of a seagoing career to come.

At the end of my junior college year, in 1940, a war time military career appeared probable and at this time also the navy opened its reserve officers training program. After learning of it thru a radio announcement, I wandered around to the naval armory at the foot of Randolph street one Saturday morning in August to learn if I would be eligible.

In my junior year in high school the late Sen. J. Hamilton Lewis had obtained for me an appointment to the naval academy. At that time my feet were comfortably, but nonmilitarily, flat. This was what had caused my doubt as to eligibility in 1940.

An Early Applicant to Navy.

On this August day the armory was a typical peace time naval establishment. Beside the doors were the memorable navy posters: "I Have Not Yet Begun to Fight!" [John Paul Jones]; "Don't Give Up the Ship!" [James Lawrence], and from World War I., the drawing by Howard Chandler Christy, with its caption: "Gee! I Wish I Were a Man! I'd Join the Navy."

I took them in at a glance and walked into an office. The yeoman seated there looked up in surprise. Few people called at the armory in those days and it developed I was the fourth man to inquire about the new program.

The yeoman took me in to Lt. Comm. Elmer Carlson, who explained the requirements. He told me that signing up would entail a month's cruise out of New York to the Caribbean and Panama. At the end of this I either would be selected for further training or be rejected.

He Decides to Go.

If selected, I would go to school three months. After that, if peace still were with us, I would return to civilian life with a commission to await my call, which would come if and when necessary.

I went home and talked it over with my family. The opportunity looked good. I decided to go.

The next thing was to get squared away with my boss at the office. He is an old navy man. His eyes lighted up with the fire of battle. He gave me a letter, stating I might return after the training period without placing either my position or my seniority in jeopardy.

Takes the Impressive Oath.

A new world was opening before me, the world of the greatest outfit I ever have imagined—the fighting surface ships of our navy. But on the day I signed up I had no conception of what a different world it was to be. I took the impressive navy oath:

"I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America; that I will serve honestly and faithfully against all their enemies, whomsoever; that I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the rules and articles for the government of the navy."

I lowered my right hand. I was ready for orders. And they were to come soon.

TWO RECAPTURED BOYS ARE SENT TO PENITENTIARY

Court Finds Pair Too Tough for Training School.

Two of seven young criminals, who escaped from the Illinois State Training School for Boys near St. Charles last Tuesday, have been turned over to prison authorities to serve their sentences in one of the state's penitentiaries, R. W. Ballard, managing officer of the school, reported yesterday.

Four others have been transferred to the walled branch of the school at Sheridan, and the seventh has been placed in a discipline cottage, Ballard said.

Pair Sent to Penitentiary.

The two being sent to a penitentiary are William Anderson, 17, of 1225 Adams street, and Harold Niesen, 19, of 6631 Albion avenue. Anderson was sent to the school last Feb. 26 by Judge John A. Sbarbaro in Criminal court to serve one year to life on three charges of armed robbery.

Previously he had been sent to the school in 1940 by the Juvenile court for larceny and was paroled a year later.

Niesen was on probation for stealing an automobile when he was arrested for burglary last August. Judge Julius H. Miner in the Criminal court ordered that his sentence begin in the school.

Ballard went before Judge Sbarbaro after their capture and obtained an order to turn the two over to the prison authorities, stating that they were too tough to keep at the school. Under the law, the Criminal court has the discretion to send youths up to the age of 19 to the school.

Five Must Stay at School.

The managing officer said that the five others had been sent there by the Juvenile court and must be imprisoned in the school. The four transferred to the Sheridan branch were Kenneth Scarber, 18, of Duquoin, Ill., Leon Asher, 18, of Galesburg, Ill., and Michael Rospapa, 19, of 306 West 24th street, all parole violators, and Max Zivkovick, 19, of 8804 Buffalo avenue. The Chicagoans were sent to the school by Judge Frank H. Bicek.

The other fugitive, who was placed in a discipline cottage, was Walter Carnes, 17, of Metropolis, Ill. Ballard said that there is only one unit, which can handle 60 prisoners.

M. P. A. writes: "I am a sophomore in engineering college and I have tried repeatedly to get into some of the college training programs, but I've been turned down every time because of poor visual acuity, mine being just over 8/20, and I'm supposed to be partially color blind. Is there some one of the programs or branches of service where I would be acceptable?"

ANSWER: The navy has announced that full time juniors or seniors regularly enrolled in an engineering course leading to a baccalaureate degree, who have visual acuity of 8/20 [about 20/50] in each eye correctible to 20/20, can be enlisted in the navy SV-7 program even tho they also have some color perception deficiencies. This announcement represents quite a change in requirements. In addition to being enrolled in an engineering course leading to a degree, the student must be majoring in physics, naval architecture, mathematics, or electronics. Candidates for voluntary induction in class SV-7 should visit the nearest office of naval officer procurement and have with them a statement of enrollment from an accredited college; birth certificate or other acceptable evidence of citizenship; three letters of character recommendation—one from a member of the college faculty; a résumé of not less than 50 words covering all vocational, avocational, and military experience; and two passport size pictures [front and profile].

C. S. O. writes: "I have been in service for nine months now and have made three separate applications for admittance to officer candidate school, but each time I have been told I could not be accepted because of physical defects. Won't any of us with physical defects ever be admitted to these schools?"

ANSWER: Any man who is considered physically qualified for retention on active service is considered by the war department as physically qualified to attend the army administration, the adjutant general, the medical, and the army air forces [administrative and statistical] officer candidate schools. Officers denying the applicant admission to these schools solely on the basis of their physical defects are misinterpreting paragraph 8f [2] of army regulation 625-5.

S. T. A. writes: "Our boy has written home that he has signed up for a class B allotment. Do you know what it is for?"

ANSWER: The army is discontinuing the pay deduction plan of bond purchases and is arranging for the purchase of bonds on an allotment plan known as a class B allotment.

O. C. A. writes: "Our school announced that examinations for the navy V-12 program will be given April 2 to everybody from 17 to 22 years of age. In your column you said 17 to 20—which is it?"

ANSWER: 17 to 20 for the schools; 17 to 22 inclusive for men already in the regular navy and naval reserve.

CHICAGOAN TOKIO 'MAILMAN' FOR PRISONERS' KIN

Forwards Air Messages of Jap Broadcasts.

In scores of homes thruout the United States fathers and mothers are blessing the name of Bernard J. A. Dahl, Chicago attorney, for thru his efforts many relatives have gained the first word in months from American war prisoners in Japan.

Bernard Dahl.

Each evening at 6 o'clock Dahl tunes in Radio Tokio on his radio in his home, 5047 Winthrop avenue. For 15 minutes a Japanese war news report gives what Dahl describes as "largely propaganda," but it permits him to adjust his radio for better reception from 6:15 to 6:20 p. m. when three or four messages from war prisoners are broadcast.

Forwards Word by Airmail.

With pad on his knee Dahl copies the messages and forwards them by airmail to relatives mentioned in the broadcast. He began this "hobby" last December when he accidentally tuned in the Tokio station while a prisoner message was being broadcast. Since then he has forwarded scores of messages to nearly every state and, in reply, has received the grateful thanks of many worried relatives.

"There is a lot of human interest in these messages," Dahl said. "Here is a message I picked up March 7 in which Alfred J. Balsam broadcasts to 'Dear Em' that he wants powdered milk and egg concentrates. The same night Emil Rawitzer broadcast he had been a prisoner since the fall of Corregidor and had been in his present camp since April 19.

"Many of the messages start with thanks to the Japanese government for the privilege of broadcasting to relatives. J. W. Callaghan Jr. asked on March 8 that some kind person ask his son in Eugene, Ore., to send him smoking tobacco and a pipe. I sent the message on to the son that night. Most of the requests are for food concentrates, sweet chocolate, fruit cake, and razor blades, and all of the prisoners want letters."

Because of atmospheric conditions and power lines near his home, Dahl said, he missed some of the broadcasts but he sticks faithfully to his post every evening, satisfied if he gets no more than the name of the prisoner and the relative to whom he is broadcasting. The many letters of appreciation he receives, he said, repay him a thousand times over for the small expense and time required for his hobby.

Scrawled in pencil on a postal card was this message: "Kind friend: It was very kind of you to send the message of our son on to us as it made our home much brighter. . . . May God bless you for this good deed. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Redwine, Route 4, Decatur, Tex."

Dahl said he only wished that others thruout the country would join him in this "hobby."

IT MAY NOT BE SO BAD.

Men who talk about post-war planning for this country say that after the war there will be widespread unemployment. The number to be thrown out of work when the munitions industries are closed down is placed at 10 to 20 million. Some use even bigger figures. Fifty million is the biggest figure we have heard. Any one is at liberty to think of a number.

Certainly there will be a gigantic readjustment. Millions of persons engaged in making airplanes, warships, weapons, ammunition and many kinds of supplies useful only in war will find themselves out of employment. However, it is easy to exaggerate the early depressive effects of the post-war recession.

Leaving out ships, airplanes, weapons, and ammunition, the army and navy buy many articles, the use of which by civilians is cut off or restricted during the war. Peace will not mean any lessening of production here.

Every company that turned from peace time lines to strictly war production will get back into civilian goods business with all possible haste. Every manufacturer has made plans about what he is going to do the minute he is told the war is over. Blueprints for the change back are ready for use at a moment's notice. A sensible manufacturer knows exactly what he is going to make, and how he is going to make it. He is, wherever possible, keeping his old channels of distribution open. He is giving help to his old dealers to enable them to stay in business. He is protecting his good will with the public by telling how the old product can be made to last longer. He is seeing to it that his trade name does not become unfamiliar.

How long the shift to a peace time basis will take will vary greatly. In some industries it can be done almost immediately. Patterns and dies were put away and machines can be set up to turn out the pre-war product in no time. In others it will be a longer drawnout operation, but every manufacturer of a peace time product realizes that the sooner he can get into production the better it will be for him. Moreover, employés in the industries which changed over to war and must now change back know that they can have their old jobs back on a permanent basis as soon as the necessary preparations can be made in the plants.

Workers who have been employed at high hourly wages for long hours on war work are not going to object to a rather prolonged rest, if they know that a steady job awaits them, when reconversion is completed. Those who failed to perceive this missed it by a mile when they estimated the consequence of the change over to a war economy. In the winter of 1941-'42, when the automobile plants stopped producing cars and prepared to turn out only munitions, some crystal gazers forecast a disastrous downturn in retail business in Detroit and the other motor cities. Preparations were made to provide relief for from 250,000 to 300,000. The forecasters underestimated the number required to work on the conversion, and overestimated the time it would take. And they did not realize that many would welcome a little rest with plenty of work just around the corner. The number who presented claims for unemployment compensation was less than half the estimate. Sales of Detroit stores showed no signs of a depression.

Those who are asking for the authorization of gigantic post-war public work projects take the position that if the government does not make jobs there won't be any after the war. These people refuse to realize that if it will take time for industry to get in production on the peace time lines, it will take even more time for the government to gather the materials, the tools, the land, and right of way for public housing ventures, roads, and hydro-electric projects. Those who urge the necessity for appropriations of billions of dollars for public works must be convinced that the government, starting from scratch on these activities, can get into operation faster than private industry can.

What seems likely to happen if the post-war planners within the administration have their way is that the government will be able to get going about the time that the post-war boom is approaching its crest. There is every reason to believe that clumsy efforts of the government to help the post-war readjustment will make matters worse than they otherwise would be.

The government can do much for post-war reconstruction by making it possible for private industry to proceed with confidence. The present congress, which is repeatedly slapping down the social reformers, shows that it understands what individual initiative can do when incentives are not withheld. More of the same will improve the post-war outlook.

MORE WATER IS NEEDED.

William A. Rowan, one of Chicago's congressmen, deserves some credit for directing the attention of the house rivers and harbors committee to the lakes to gulf waterway. A resolution introduced by Mr. Rowan and approved by the committee authorizes that a study be made to determine the practicability of deepening the channel to 12 feet.

If Mr. Rowan had been content to rest there, his fellow citizens of this city and state would have felt that he had done a good day's work. But he then felt impelled to undo a good deal of it by informing the committee that "deepening of the channel should not necessitate an increase in the diversion of water from Lake Michigan."

We do not know why it is that when our representatives in Washington get on the subject of the Illinois waterway they almost invariably put themselves on the defensive, or why, when they start talking about lake diversion, they almost immediately become apologetic. There are enough burocrats in the New Deal disposed to treat the waterway as a stepchild without having our own representatives join in the same attitude.

The fact is that the waterway was built almost entirely with the money of the people of this city and state and, for that reason, represents a tremendous contribution to the nation which did not cost the rest of the country a penny. It has been of the utmost usefulness to our economy and in war has proved an indispensable link in our system of inland navigation.

Chicago and the waterway have been badgered and criticized by other lake states and by the Supreme court for diverting a volume of water from Lake Michigan inadequate to maintain a satisfactory channel for waterway shipping. This hostility has repaid us for our gift of the waterway to the nation, even tho no one has ever been able to demonstrate that the slightest injury was caused any other state or interest by withdrawing water from the lake.

The project depth of 9 feet for the Illinois waterway is infrequently attained and the principal hindrances to navigation on the lakes to gulf route are the shallows at Grafton, near the mouth of the Illinois river, and at Chain-of-Rocks, just beyond in the Mississippi. Increased diversion from the lake is the one sure means of making the waterway navigable at all times of the year. While the war demands that congress act for the nation, congressmen also should remember that they represent districts and states, and we expect ours to speak up for our interests when the occasion arises, as it has in this discussion of the waterway.

A HARVEST OF CYNICISM.

Twenty-five year old omens are rising to warn people to come back down to earth. President Conant of Harvard, an interventionist, interpreted the signs nearly a year ago: "To some who view the present chaos in the light of the follies of the last 20 years, no small measure of blame must be laid at the door of the prevalent utopian philosophy. . . When impossible dreams are set before men's minds no harvest except bitter disillusionment and cynicism can be expected. . . Modern civilization will be hard pressed, indeed, if another era of cynicism is the product of the utopian war aims of this struggle."

It may be that the damage has been done and is irreparable. The impossible dreams have been set before men's minds. By the people of many lands the dreams have been accepted as the binding promises of powerful nations. But they are not pledges to be honored. They are not promises to be kept. Nor, once solemnly uttered and placed in signed documents, can they be honorably retracted. They are in the form of a contract to which the good faith of the united nations supposedly has been given. Properly characterized this conduct would be called infamous. It is all the worse because it is a repetition of conduct which has been under reprobation for 20 years.

Twice in a generation an American government sending an army to Europe has been allowed to declare war aims wholly at variance with the intentions of its allies, who, in the end, were found guilty of gross deception. The American rhapsody may have revealed a world of idealism, but certainly one of little common sense and of small regard for inevitabilities. The parallelism of 1918 and 1943 leaves no escape from indictment. In both historic instances an American President, with the world under his arm, took off for the millennium. His companions in arms encouraged him to do so

Lloyd George and Clemenceau thought Mr. Wilson's thunder about the new freedoms in the 14 points gave them an expedient morality and might, as it did, more quickly encourage the Germans to reconcile themselves to defeat as not without hope. Neither statesman had any intention of accepting the declarations they were supposed to indorse. Mr. Wilson was welcome to the pulpit if his discourse helped the counting house. Mr. Roosevelt is in that position now. The France of Clemenceau is out of the picture at present. When it returns it will be the France of Clemenceau.

Before the armistice Wilson had come to an agreement with the German government which had appealed to him because he was the accepted allied spokesman. The Germans asked for peace negotiations on the basis of the points. That forced a showdown. Clemenceau said he had not been asked by Wilson to accept the points. Lloyd George said he was not committed to them. "Should we not make it clear to the German government," the British prime minister asked, "that we are not going in on the basis of the 14 points for peace?"

Col. House for Mr. Wilson replied that if they intended to repudiate the principles which the world had been led to believe were the war aims, already agreed upon by Germany and the United States as the formula for the peace, then all Mr. Wilson could do would be to inform the German government that all negotiations were off and "to go to congress to place before that body exactly what Italy, France, and Great Britain were fighting for and to place the responsibility on congress for the further continuance of the war by the United States in behalf of the aims of the allies." Mr. Roosevelt could but will not do that now.

The threat of an immediate and separate peace, with the American army marooned in France, was something fancy in the way of bluff, but it caused the allies to abandon the idea of an abrupt and all-out repudiation in favor of a piece by piece operation in accord with their secret treaties. Now again the aims declared by the American government, more extravagant and flamboyant aims than Mr. Wilson's, are not the war aims of the allied governments. Default already is in the prospect. Great Britain and Russia have made it plain by official statements that the war is one of self-interest, one to gain or regain territory, to reëstablish supremacy, to set some of the little nations back on their feet, to take possession of others, to regain the balance of power, to regain, retain, and even expand their empires, to give the law and to collect the profits.

Some of these purposes are good, all of them may be understandable. But they are not the war aims the American government has announced. There again will be a clear case of treachery. Russia and Great Britain have a 20 year treaty for the government of Europe. That is not a charter of freedoms but, unlike the Atlantic Charter which Mr. Churchill limited to the Atlantic, it may mean business.

We persistently ignore the fact that no European chief of state can or wants to escape from the centuries old habits of his office. The habits are as deeply rooted as the law of the jungle and not much different. To a European chief of state, war is expectable and to be preferred to a loss of stature. The great disaster to be avoided at all cost is the decadence of the state. England would fight a war every generation—and had—rather than accept the reduced but peaceful and prosperous condition of, say Sweden, once a conqueror. Mr. Churchill could not endure that. Upon such soil we attempt to plant our utopias and in such soil we raise deception, disillusionment, and cynicism.

REVOLUTION OF WARFARE

The following address was given last night by Col. Robert R. McCormick, editor and publisher of THE TRIBUNE, on the Chicago Theater of the Air over W-G-N, W59C, and the Mutual Broadcasting system.

BY COL. ROBERT R. McCORMICK.

Some months ago I referred to the fact that the first warships were propelled by oars. Later when sails were added they were used only as auxiliaries. The early warships cruised in the Mediterranean; and Mediterranean principles followed them to the ocean in the Spanish Armada, which was destroyed, as we know, by sailing ships. Sailing ships then became supreme for some two hundred years. Even so, sailors were long looked upon as inferiors by soldiers on ship board.

Altho steam engines were being put in boats in Nelson's time, navies clung to sails, and when they did accept steam engines, considered them auxiliaries.

Sailing ships and sailing ships with steam auxiliaries of the United States navy were happily at anchor in the harbor of Newport News when they were attacked, defeated, and practically destroyed by the frigate Merrimac, converted by the Confederates into the steam ironclad Virginia. Thereafter Adm. Farragut achieved many notable victories maneuvering under steam power, but after the war Adm. Porter threatened to court martial any captain who steamed when sails could be used, and as late as 1893 the cruiser Chicago was built to be as much a sailing ship as a steamship.

By the outbreak of the Spanish-American war in 1898, however, the warships on both sides had been converted to steam. That and the Russian-Japanese war of 1904-'05 were steamship wars. The former was exclusively a war of cannon, but in the latter torpedoes were the deciding factor.

With the outbreak of the World war in 1914, Adm. Jellicoe sensed that the day of the heavy steamship was approaching its end, but did not know what to do about it other than keep the fleet locked up in harbor. He did not press the fight at Jutland for fear of torpedoes from gasoline driven submarines and torpedo boats still propelled by steam.

On land from the dawn of history to the Civil war in America, armies depended for movement exclusively on horse power. That was why Napoleon could say truly, "Study the campaigns of Alexander, Hannibal, Caesar, Gustavus, Turenne, Eugene, and Frederic. Make them your models. This is the only way to become a great general and to master the secrets of the arts of war."

In the Civil war astounding triumphs were achieved by the use of steamboats. By their use and the use of railroad trains, Gen. Butler relieved Washington and captured Baltimore.

Thereafter in campaign after campaign, Gen. Grant marched from victory to victory, mystifying all of his opponents by his use of river boats, and finally captured Gen. Lee's army by using a railroad while Lee was retreating on foot.

For 70 years these methods were utterly lost upon military students. Von Moltke, generally considered the greatest military genius of that period, could only see the Civil war as "a matter of two armed mobs chasing each other around the country from which nothing could be learned."

In 1914 steam dominated the naval mind, while in the army it was confined to movement behind the battle line. Movements there and in front of it were limited to the speed of horses and men. No thought was given to the invention which came rapidly into use at the turn of the century. I refer to the internal combustion engine which had entered every dimension of locomotion.

Sportsmen, notably in France, successfully adapted the internal combustion engine to vehicular propulsion on the excellent roads of that country. The inventor, Holland, put it in his submarine. The Brazilian, Santos-Dumont, used it in his early experiments propelling gas balloons. A number of men used it in efforts to fly airplanes, of whom the Wright brothers were successful.

In 1905 Holt invented the track laying tractor. Gathman had long before discovered that high explosive bombs exploded outside of a ship would destroy the ship. Whitehead had invented the torpedo.

Holland was a Fenian who devoted his life and talents to destroy England. The Wrights and Gathman were pure scientists; Holt and Whitehead manufacturers; all the other experimenters using internal combustion engines were sportsmen, which is not strange. Sport has been akin to war at all periods of history.

The engine used with these discoveries and inventions was to revolutionize completely every form of warfare. It was in common use but its potentialities were almost ignored by the men to whom they were most important—the soldiers and sailors.

Tractors had been used in hauling supplies to South Africa and were in common use in bringing market vegetables into London. Gasoline driven omnibuses and taxis were in common use in Europe as early as 1910 and trucks were in use in a lesser degree. In 1914 London buses were moved to France with the first army and were used in the rear of the lines to some extent for moving supplies and even men, but the main reliance was still placed upon the railroads and horse transportation.

Gen. Gallieni's sensational use of the Paris taxicabs to attack the right flank of the German army during the battle of the Marne, captured the imagination of the civilian world, but made little dent upon the military mind. Verdun and possibly France, was saved by the motor trucks which were organized to carry supplies into the fortress after the railroad had been cut.

Armored cars were in use before the outbreak of war, but as they could not proceed off the roads, were of no practical value. Then some English officers, Gen. Fuller and Col. Swinton in particular, conceived the idea of arming Holt tractors. They even conceived the tactics of using them en masse and in depth into enemy territory. The higher British command did not support the tank attack in the battle of Cambrai and thereafter, both the British and the French refused to use them en masse and in depth but merely as infantry spearheads behind which footmen could advance with some cover and which could smash thru the wire, overrun machine guns, and enfilade trenches.

As the Germans could not employ tanks from lack of gasoline, the tanks furnished the allied forces that additional power which was largely responsible for the allied victory.

Human nature prevented the allied generals from acknowledging that their success was largely due to a new weapon which had been forced upon them. They clung firmly to doctrines which they thought were successful in 1918 and some of them reverted to doctrines which had been disproved in the war.

When the airplane was introduced into the army it was allotted to the signal corps, the newest and, accordingly, the least considered branch of the service. Its personnel in the last war came for the most part from civil life. The brightest of the regular officers were assigned to the general staff, where they devoted their time to studies of the horse drawn days and ignored the possibilities of the new engine.

On the other hand, a willingness to recognize a cause for defeat, the lack of tanks, which had been beyond their control, and inferiority in the air, enabled the German generals to overcome the super-conservatism which causes all professions and all trades to resent all innovations. They studied the use of the internal combustion engine in all of its possible forms and the machines and weapons which it made possible, and how to use the machines together.

How the internal combustion engine has revolutionized warfare and made a mockery of Napoleon's famous directive, we will see next week.

FEAR MUST NOT UPSET SELF-CONFIDENCE.

THE man or woman who is utterly devoid of fear does not exist. Thus far, humanity has not become stainless steel. Our bodies, made up as they are of relatively soft tissues, are responsive to spiritual, emotional, and inherent needs. The driving force in a given individual may be ambition. But there is a limit to daring.

What is the instinct of self-preservation if it is not fear? We hesitate to plunge across a crowded street without looking in all directions to make certain that the pathway is clear. "Watch your step" is an ever-repeated caution. We don heavy clothing against inclement weather because we dread the results of chill.

But sometimes the feeling is so overwhelming that it may prove paralyzing—literally. Movement may become impossible. We may recall the explanation of the recruit who raced to the rear at the sound of the first shot. "I didn't run away. My legs did. I had no control over them."

The shriek of one who is alarmed and the scream of agony are manifestations of the same trait. It was Emerson who remarked that "fear is an instructor of great sagacity." The law provides punishment in the hope that transgressors will avoid the risk. Many an act of ruthlessness fails of commission because we are afraid of being caught and exposed.

Most of us have had personal experiences. Seized with momentary panic, we exhibit rapid beating of the heart, hurried breathing, dryness of the mouth, stuttering speech, a closed up throat, etc. Those who have never witnessed a cattle stampede can have no conception of the rout that may be born of terror. Such an onrushing herd possesses the destructive power of an army.

Just as apprehension can affect the individual, so it may apply with equal force to the population of communities. Under its stimulus, laws may be enacted and movements brought to fruition which would be considered ill-advised in other circumstances. The highest type of control is required to think clearly and plan wisely when emotions are completely out of hand because of threats to life and property.

Economic factors may have something to do with periods of financial stringency which have fastened themselves periodically upon our affairs. Could we have eradicated the element of alarm during one of these intervals thousands of banks would have remained solvent. The prompt insistence upon the withdrawal of every dollar by every depositor would wreck any financial structure.

But we have all learned to make compensations. The lad who whistles in the dark is beginning to acquire mastery of self. The mother who calmly binds up her child's bleeding finger, her countenance wearing a reassuring smile, will banish the youngster's anxiety. Were she to make a fuss, race hither and yon, call loudly for hot water, bandages, etc., the little sufferer would be in a dither.

But these are anxious days and many more are in prospect. So far as possible, we can eliminate the threat of punishment, bodily injury, and harsh words in the presence of those who are younger. At the same time we can avoid oversolicitude, which is certain to destroy self-reliance. Finally we can build confidence by never betraying faith. The petrifying effect of fear must not be allowed to linger.

BOTH PAINFUL.

P. H. writes: What is the relationship between gout and arthritis?

REPLY.

None in fact. Gout is characterized by deposits of urates in or about the joints, beneath the skin, etc. The cause of arthritis is unknown. Both conditions may be present in the same individual.

TIME NEEDED.

M. L. writes: After an attack, will coronary thrombosis show up on the electrocardiogram?

REPLY.

Not immediately—after a week or two.

THE FUTURE LIES HERE.

Benoit, Miss., March 9.—Henry Clay, on his way by stage to Washington for the opening of congress, stopped the night at an inn atop the Blue Ridge mountains. The next morning all passengers were seated in the stage coach ready to go, save Mr. Clay, who was observed by the driver standing in a listening attitude, his head inclined toward the west. The driver approaching said, "Mr. Clay, for what are you listening?" Mr. Clay replied, "I am listening for the footsteps of the millions of people who will some day inhabit the Mississippi valley and govern the destinies of this nation."

In this valley live enough people to elect a President and congress. Here natural resources are in such abundance we can feed and clothe the world, and build the highest civilization known to history; agriculture is the dominant occupation and the political interests of the people of the entire valley are identical. The reasonable and logical thing, for the southern and northern half of the valley, is to unite politically and be ready to meet the wave of socialism and communism that has engulfed Europe and Asia and is certain to attempt conquest of this citadel of private enterprise, founded on civil and religious freedom and liberty. Slavery separated these two sections of the valley more than 150 years ago, and 80 years after slavery is dead, men still vote in the dead past, altho socialism and communism are knocking at our door.

We builded out of this wilderness of 350 years ago the best government for a land with the highest standard of living and the happiest and most prosperous people in the world. It took "tears, sweat, and blood" to so build. And now when every crazy "ism" under the sun, both within and without our blessed land, is attacking the very foundation of our American way of life, men hesitate and vacillate between voting in the dead past or resolutely turning their face to the future to save the best government ever instituted among men.

The Mississippi valley will never give up the good life for any untried crackpot theories of government. The natural topography of the land calls for political unity of the southern and northern halves of this valley. The social, educational, religious, business, and financial interests of the people cry out for it. If the voters of this valley do not want the Socialists, Communists, and dreamers to seize their government, they will unite under one political banner and make the prophecy of Henry Clay come true.

Chrisney, Ind., March 13.—Why is it whenever I start work on my income tax returns that I think of the $13,951 spent by the OWI for the comic book, generally known as "Superman in the White House"? Is it the coincidence of the $13,000 and the 13 per cent surtax, or the hunch that the tax I must scrape up may be used for some other such silly New Deal fourth term propaganda project rather than applied to the war effort as intended?

JAMES ADAMS.

RATION BOARD BUNGLING.

Chicago, March 15.—When sugar was rationed I declared all of it and, therefore, didn't get a book. When the coffee situation came up I had to go back. Each time they said, "Come tomorrow." They didn't seem to be prepared for truthful people.

Now I need No. 1 and No. 2 books for my daughter, who was too young for coffee and didn't get taken care of when I finally got books for my husband and myself. They had me coming back until the Saturday before registration for book 2. Then they told me I could get it at a school. Of course, that was a bum steer.

I have just come from the board for the umpteenth time. I stood in the pouring rain for three hours. Then I found out we had to have an affidavit before I could get in. If I can get a notary and don't have pneumonia before morning I can start all over again.

Can you tell me why they encourage people to lie about food they possess? We weren't hoarding. Our sugar was obtained long before war was declared. Of course, we expect red tape, but enough is enough.

Don't get me wrong. It's not rationing I object to. I think there should have been more of it, sooner. The sacrifices I might bear would be so much less than my brothers', who are in the army. It's the system by which it is conducted.

PAULINE CASTLE.

McKINLEY ON PRESIDENTIAL TENURE.

Chicago, March 15.—In view of the fourth term agitation, the statement of President William McKinley is significant. Here is his declaration of June 10, 1901:

"I regret that the suggestion of a third term has been made. I doubt whether I am called upon to give it notice. But there are now questions of the gravest importance before the administration and the country, and their just consideration should not be prejudiced in the public mind by even the suspicion of the thought of a third term.

"In view, therefore, of the reiteration of the suggestion of it, I will say now, once for all, expressing a long settled conviction, that I am not only not, and will not, be a candidate for a third term, but would not accept a nomination for it if it were tendered me.

"My only ambition is to serve thru my second to the acceptance of my countrymen, whose generous confidence I so deeply appreciate, and then with them to do my duty in the ranks of private citizenship."

Did not President McKinley's attitude express the true American spirit, which must rule Presidents and people if our Republic is to survive?

EDWARD TALLMADGE ROOT.

"COMMERCIALS" IN ILL TASTE.

Chicago, March 15.—Last Sunday, one of our large radio stations again broadcast the singing of hymns by the sailors at Great Lakes. The boys have a splendid chorus with excellent harmony, balance and shading—a real treat to hear. Their final number was a solemn and beautiful prayer for heavenly protection at sea which was extremely effective.

At the close, without any warning, was broadcast one of the many idiotic commercials—this time that inane "Golly, Molly, have you tried the new high speed manure?" Radio stations are naturally interested in the income derived from commercials, but can't they use a little common sense? Sunday's episode was so aggravating that I wouldn't buy the product now if it was alone in its field. A few of the commercials are clever and effective, but the great majority are silly and insulting to the average person's intelligence; then to have one of the latter thrown into your face in the manner and at the time above described, well——

LEASE RENEWAL.

Chicago, March 11.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—Our lease expired in April of last year. At that time the landlord asked if we were going to stay and I said yes. 1. He did not give us a new lease. Another year has passed and he has asked again what we intend to do and I have told him we will remain in the apartment. 2. Should I ask for a new lease or is the original one still good? I always thought a new lease was given each year. 3. Does my verbal consent to remain in the apartment renew the old lease?

A. F.

1. Where a tenant under a lease for a definite term holds over beyond the term and the landlord accepts additional rent, these circumstances, in the absence of other circumstances showing a contrary intent on the part of the landlord, result in a renewal by implication so that neither party can terminate the tenancy nor increase the rent during such renewal.
2. It can be done either way.
3. No, but your holding over and his accepting the rent would effect a renewal.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT

ASSISTANCE FOR THE NEEDY.

Chicago, March 6.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—What amount of property can a person own and yet be qualified to receive old age assistance?

J. B.

Sections 2, 3, 7½, and 13 indicate that the old age assistance is for persons who need it. It is to be sufficient, when added to other income and support, to provide a reasonable subsistence, but not over $40 per month. Carrying of insurance beyond the $100 figure fixed for a minimum funeral or payment of previous debts, indicates that the old person can spare a part of his income and hence contradicts his claim that he needs the assistance.

A single person is not disqualified by holding $400 or a married couple $600 in cash or securities. If they own their home, it is also excepted unless a portion is rented for a gross income of over $500 per year. As to property not so occupied as a home, if the fair value calculated from the assessed value is above the $400 or $600 figure mentioned, the applicant must list the property with a broker for sale.

New York, March 20 (AP).—Two Negroes were shot and killed by policemen in Harlem tonight as a special detail of 1,483 extra officers patroled thru areas of Harlem and Brooklyn to halt a recent wave of banditry and other disorders.

Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine, who ordered the special detail, largest in the department's history, said he asked white and Negro clergymen to hold a joint conference Monday to discuss means for stopping assaults on pedestrians.

The first shooting tonight came when Detective James Sweeney killed a Negro who had resisted arrest and had lunged at him three times with a knife. Leslie H. Carroll, a rookie Negro patrolman, reported he had shot and killed one of two Negro brothers whom he said had just held up two stores.

PRESS CAMPAIGN TO BLOCK SALES OF UNFIT MEAT

The Illinois department of agriculture yesterday announced an intensified drive against farmers and others who sell diseased cattle to illegal meat markets following the conviction of Peter Dombroski of Alden.

Dombroski pleaded guilty to offering 1,499 pounds of meat for sale from cattle which had died of pneumonia, emaciation, and abscesses. He was fined $100 and costs by Justice of the Peace Charles F. Hayes of Woodstock and the meat was destroyed.

"We will not tolerate the sale of unfit meat in Illinois," Zean Gassmann, superintendent of the department's division of foods and dairies, said.

"The problem is of recent origin and while it has been growing, we believe that it can be checked and the Dombroski conviction will be of material assistance."

from 1906 to 1911 and was war time governor of Illinois from 1917 to 1921.

It was with the election of President McKinley that Lowden began his record of turning down political appointments. He declined the appointment of first assistant postmaster general. Next, President Taft asked him to become assistant secretary of the navy. President Harding urged him to head the navy department. President Coolidge invited him to be ambassador to Great Britain or to join his cabinet, presumably as secretary of agriculture. He preferred to remain on his farm.

Despite his great wealth [he was Illinois' wealthiest governor], Lowden came up thru the ranks of adversity. He was born Jan. 26, 1861, at Sunrise, Minn., the son of the village blacksmith. As a boy he went to Iowa in a prairie schooner, his family settling on a farm in Hardin county.

Taught Country School.

He taught a country school as a young man at Burlington, Ia., for five years and then earned his way thru the University of Iowa to be graduated as valedictorian of his class.

Young Lowden came to Chicago in 1886. He worked his way thru law school by serving as a law clerk and living in an attic. He completed a two year course in one and again was named valedictorian and prize orator of his class.

As a young lawyer he won recognition for his brilliance. He established a profitable law practice, being noted especially for his trial court ability. Here was the beginning of his great wealth. This was augmented in several business reorganizations and by his farm holdings.

In 1896, when he was 35, he married Florence Pullman, daughter of George Pullman, founder of the Pullman company. Three daughters and a son were born to them. Mrs. Lowden died July 5, 1937.

Lowden was a candidate for governor of Illinois in 1904, but was defeated for nomination by Charles S. Deneen. However, he was chosen national Republican committeeman and held that post until 1912. In 1916 he again ran for governor. This time he won easily.

It was during that campaign that his opponents ridiculed him as a "gentleman farmer" and said he didn't know how to milk a cow.

"I didn't know that ability to milk a cow was one of the qualifications for governor," he answered, "but I challenge the other candidates to a milking contest and I'll agree to let the contest decide the election." His challenge was not accepted.

As governor Lowden established himself as a sound business executive. He reduced taxes. He established the budget system. He consolidated 125 bureaus, boards, and commissions into nine major departments, each with a responsible director. He launched an extensive good roads program throughout the state.

His excellent record as governor, his handling of the Chicago race riots and his quick settlement of the Chicago street car strike brought him national attention and in 1920 he consented to run as a Presidential candidate. During the close of the Wilson administration it was evident that the next administration would be Republican.

Lowden, Sen. Hiram W. Johnson, and Gen. Leonard Wood were the outstanding Republican candidates, with Lowden having the solid backing of the agricultural interests. At the Chicago convention the race was reduced to these three.

For hours, ballot after ballot, the three candidates were deadlocked, with indications, however, of a probable victory for Lowden. Then at a psychological moment charges of vote buying were raised. Lowden, Johnson, and Wood were eliminated, with the nomination and ultimate election going to Warren G. Harding, the dark horse of the convention.

Asked to Run with Coolidge.

Four years later the Republican party offered Lowden the nomination for the vice presidency as running mate for Calvin Coolidge, but he upset all precedent and declined the nomination. Gen. Charles G. Dawes replaced him on the ticket.

Again in 1928 Lowden consented to run for President, and he wrote the farm plank for the Republican platform. His plank was rejected and he withdrew as a candidate.

For several years after the 1928 campaign, Lowden remained virtually out of political life, devoting himself to his farming interests, but his hatred of the New Deal brought him out of retirement in 1936, when he campaigned for Gov. Alfred M. Landon of Kansas, Republican nominee for President.

Opponent of Undeclared War.

Lowden's rôle in ensuing years was that of a revered elder statesman of the Republican party. He made a nation-wide radio address in behalf of the Republican national ticket in October, 1940, warning that the 1940 Presidential election might be the last free election in the United States.

From his summer camp on an island in the St. Lawrence river, he issued a statement in August, 1941, bearing the signatures of 15 widely known persons, including Landon, former President Herbert Hoover, former Vice President Dawes, and Hanford MacNider.

This statement declared that "fundamental principles of democratic government" were being undermined by naval action and military occupation of bases outside the western hemisphere, and appealed to congress to "put a stop to step-by-step projection of the United States into an undeclared war."

In the last few years, Lowden divided his time between his farm and his winter home in Chandler, Ariz. On his 80th birthday—Jan. 26, 1941—he issued a message of optimism to the world, reaffirming his confidence that right triumphs in the end, and expressing the belief that the future may be looked forward to with faith and hope.

Advancing age did not hang cobwebs on his ideas. In a 1932 speech he advocated abolition of the county system of government "as a relic of oxcart days."

On the eve of his birthday in 1936 he made public his plan for a permanent farm program within the framework of the constitution, warning that swift steps must be taken to protect the soil from overcropping and erosion. Former President Hoover urged that the essence of the plan be incorporated in the Republican party's 1936 platform.

Lowden was known for his many philanthropies. At his Sinnissippi farm he and Mrs. Lowden maintained a recuperation home for sickly children. He was a trustee of the old Thomas Orchestra association and had served on the boards of St. Luke's hospital, the Chicago Relief and Aid society and the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. He headed the directorate of the Pullman Free School of Manual Training. He gave the Boy Scouts a 20 year lease, without cost to them, on a 240 acre tract of virgin timberland, part of his Sinnissippi farm.

From 1921 to 1930 he was president of the Holstein-Friesian Association of America, the largest purebred live stock association in the world. He had served as trustee of Northwestern university and had been honored by many universities.

EVANSTON TAXI STRIKERS VOTE DOWN TWO PLANS

The 150 striking driver of the Evanston Cab company and the Jitney Cab company of Evanston remained on strike yesterday after voting down two company propositions offered to settle their dispute. The company also refused the drivers' proposal that a recently imposed limit of 75 miles per day travel be raised to 125 miles. The drivers struck when the company imposed the limit. Previously they paid $3.75 rental and 25 cents bond per day for a cab, bought their own gasoline, and kept what fares they made, with no mileage limit. The drivers refused company proposals to raise the initial cab fare from 10 cents to 20 cents, with other rates and conditions remaining as before, or to provide drivers with cabs and gasoline and let them keep 40 per cent of all fares collected.

THE GREATEST TESTIMONIAL EVER GIVEN TO..

BUTTER!

URGENT...SEND US GUNS AND TANKS AND BUTTER !..

...IF YOU CAN'T SEND BUTTER, SEND LARD..
..BECAUSE LARD IS THE NEXT BEST FOR FIGHTING MEN ! FROM AMERICA WE NEED
MILLIONS OF POUNDS OF BUTTER FOR OUR ARMY !

This appeal from fighting Russia is the greatest news about butter ever to strengthen the fighting hearts of the U. S. Dairy Farmers. It is news emphatic enough—told in the simplest possible terms of desperate human need—to establish for all time the definite food and flavor superiority of butter.

It is cold, hard truth and proof that nothing can take the place of butter.

It is news that will spur American Dairy Farmers to even greater effort—to produce all the milk and cream they possibly can. So our Allies—and America—will have the greatest possible supply of butter and the other precious dairy foods in this world crisis.

There cannot be enough. The needs of our Allies and our own Army and Navy—plus an all-time peak of civilian demand—make it necessary that we must carefully share our butter—spread supplies as far as possible.

Sharing is difficult today—but it is our patriotic duty. Rationing, when it is possible, will make it easier.

The Dairy Farmer wants only that the public fully understand his problem. . . . That shortages of butter are not his fault, because his production goals are higher than ever before. And this in spite of all the shortages of manpower, equipment, and supplies that war and government policy sometimes make unavoidable.

With necessary handicaps the Dairy Farmer has no complaint. Against those imposed because of lack of official understanding, the Dairy Farmer will fight with every means at his command so that he may loyally and patriotically get his war-time job done.

No one knows better than the Dairy Farmer—unless it is the men fighting in Russia, Africa and Guadalcanal—that dairy foods—butter, milk, cheese, evaporated milk and, yes, ice cream—are vital foods! Today, these dairy foods that are a symbol of our good living in times of peace have even greater meaning. Today our dairy foods are building, maintaining fighting hearts and bodies of embattled men who must endure—who must win.

Today 30% of the butter produced in the United States is set aside for the government. Most for our Army and Navy. Last year 1% of U. S. Butter went to Russia. This year's shipments of butter to Russia have been stepped up to approximately 5% of our annual production.

YES, MRS. JONES, ARMY SEES THAT JOHN'S WELL FED

(This is the first of a series of three articles on food for the American soldier. It is the story of the operations of the quartermaster corps as seen on a two day tour of the Chicago Quartermaster depot sponsored by the women's interest section of the war department in Washington, D. C.)

BY RITA FITZPATRICK.

Mrs. Jones is still not sure that Johnny is getting enough to eat. She is not convinced that he is "the best fed soldier in the world." Each week she packs off a carton of sweets and delicacies to his camp, whether it happens to be in California or Texas. The package often arrives at its destination somewhat battered.

There are hundreds of thousands of women like Mrs. Jones in America. Postal officials have reported that the mail to camps thruout the country is choked daily with boxes of food for husbands, sons and sweethearts in the army and navy.

To correct this impression on the part of the mothers of America, the women's interest section of the war department in Washington, D. C., recently invited newspaper women to make a two day tour of the quartermaster corps depot on Chicago's south side, one of the army's important centers responsible for supplying food to the fighting forces. It was a first hand view of the world's greatest food plant, the army's scientific supervision of food for the fighters.

Eating Doubled in Army.

The newspaper women came away with a message for Mrs. Jones. Johnny is not only "the world's best fed soldier" but its heaviest eater. In civilian life he consumed two and three-quarter pounds of food daily, but he now lets out his belt to make room for five and a half pounds.

He has lemonade to quench his thirst in the sweltering jungles, ham and eggs for breakfast in combat areas, hot coffee at a moment's notice in the frozen Arctic spaces, gum and delicious chocolate to munch on and cigarets to smoke under the most trying combat conditions. He has fresh fruits and vegetables, choice beef and pastries in the camps, hot stews and enriched biscuits in the field. He is eating probably the best balanced, most highly nutritive and appetizing meals of his young life, and he has gained eight pounds.

Johnny's fighting diet is the result of years of planning and the pooling of the talents of biochemists, physiologists, technical advisers, food specialists, and wholesale food buyers. It entails a vast system of coördination between experiment and production, inspection and transportation.

Ship 72 Carloads Daily.

Here many supplies are purchased not only for the entire army but the navy, marines, and coast guard as well. Here, too, is housed the famed subsistence research laboratory, the only one of its kind in existence, where lightweight, nutritive foods which must stand up under all conditions in all climes are developed. Here is the chemical laboratory where each shipment of goods is inspected minutely to make sure that it meets the most rigid standards.

It also has a huge coffee roasting plant where the delicate flavors of four coffees are blended, roasted, and shipped out fresh within 48 hours to camps in the sixth service command and part of the seventh. Near by and working in coöperation with the depot is the quartermaster corps market center, one of 37 thruout the country, where army specialists and federal buyers purchase perishable foods on the open market daily for camps in the surrounding locale.

Much Manufactured Near By.

Around the quartermaster corps depot the chimneys of large plants turning out biscuits and stews, emergency rations, and chewing gum for the army and navy signal their coöperation in unceasing clouds of smoke. In its back yard are the huge packing plants, where the finest of the nation's cattle are slaughtered for the army and boned down to achieve the maximum of meat with the minimum of waste of shipping space.

A tour of these plants revealed a 24 hour a day peak production carefully supervised by inspectors of the quartermaster corps. No army biscuit slides out of the oven in nearby plants that has not been slowly baked and cooled—according to army specifications. No can of stew moves off the assembly line in another plant that has not been completely filled and tested for the proper proportions.

No carcass of beef is butchered at the packing plants that has not been first selected for high quality by army veterinarians, and no package of emergency rations rattles down the chute at yet another factory that has not been tested to withstand the rigors of all kinds of weather and conditions.

Army and Industry Coöperate.

It is all part of the joint effort of trained army personnel and private enterprise to produce the "fightin'est foods for the fightin'est men." The result is that Johnny, the American soldier, is actually "the best fed in the world."

Gen. Barzynski said the army works on the principal that the hearty eater is a healthy soldier. The average American man will not eat unless the food is appetizing and, therefore, taste is as important as vitamins or minerals. Care is taken to provide those foods with which the soldier is most familiar and emergency field rations contain such Yankee fare as corn beef hash, beef stew, and combined ham and eggs whether the soldier is stationed in Africa or on maneuvers in northern Michigan.

In the first World war, the daily cost of feeding one soldier averaged 26 cents. Today, it is approximately 58 cents, or $211.70 a year, an all-time high in army budgeting. As the army reached 1,500,000 men, its food bill rose to $870,000 daily, $100,000 of which was spent for fresh fruits and vegetables.

Army statistics also show that the average soldier is more adequately fed than at least 60 per cent of the civilian population. At company type mess [meals in mess halls for approximately 100 men] he consumes around five and a half pounds of food, or 4,500 calories, a day. This is 1,500 to 3,000 calories more than the well fed civilian.

The individual company mess ration usually includes about one pound of meat, poultry or fish; one egg, one pint of milk or the equivalent, three ounces of fats, including butter; 12 ounces of grain products and cereals, 12 ounces of Irish potatoes, four ounces of tomatoes and citrus fruits, seven ounces of leafy, green and yellow vegetables, and 12 ounces of other fruits and vegetables. In addition, each meal includes bread, beverage, and desserts.

A typical daily ration selected from a recent master menu included:

Dinner: beef steak, gravy, mashed potatoes, fried cabbage, beet and sliced egg salad, bread, butter, pineapple upside down cake, fruit ade.

Supper: veal patties, tomato sauce, oven browned potatoes, parsnips, pea, celery and cheese salad, rolls, butter, butterscotch pudding, and cocoa.

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—Flying thru bad weather, beating off an attack by 25 Nazi fighting planes, roaring thru anti-aircraft fire, a bombardment group of the 8th air force successfully bombed its target at Lorient, France, the war department disclosed today in announcing citations for the entire group.

Maj. Robert E. Coulter.

The raid in which the group operated without escort and shot down nine Nazi fighter planes was carried out by daylight Oct. 21. Among members of the group awarded air medals was Maj. Robert E. Coulter, flight leader, of 539 North Waiola, La Grange, Ill.

REDUCED PRICES ON 7 VEGETABLES REPORTED NEAR

Lower prices on seven leading fresh vegetables are expected early this week to result from the new market studies being conducted by the office of price administration, Raymond S. McKeough, regional OPA administrator, said last night.

"The new price action," McKeough said, "will represent the joint efforts of the Chicago regional office and of all the district OPA offices in the seven states of this region."

On March 15 the OPA established temporary price ceilings on fresh vegetables in the region based on fixed markups at the retail and wholesale levels from maximum prices set on carlot sales. The affected vegetables are carrots, tomatoes, cabbage, snap beans, peas, lettuce and spinach.

ALL DEHYDRATED VEGETABLES PUT ON RESERVE LIST

Military Will Get Entire Supply of Goods.

Washington, D. C., March 20 [Special].—Secretary of Agriculture Claude Wickard today reserved the entire production of seven major dehydrated vegetables for war needs. After March 21 all future production of dehydrated Irish potatoes, sweet potatoes, cabbage, carrots, beets, onions, and rutabagas are reserved and others may be added later.

Civilian consumers, it was said, will be affected only indirectly by the order, as such quantities of dried foods as may be found necessary can be released under the order.

Fewer Fresh Vegetables.

Dehydrated vegetable production has increased from about 15 million pounds annually in 1941 to from 70 to 75 million pounds this year. Next year 300 million pounds will be needed for war requirements. The indirect effect of this program will make fresh vegetables scarcer for civilians.

Meanwhile, the office of price administration announced revision of methods by which retail stores or creameries selling directly to the consumers, and retailers doing their own printing of butter bought in bulk at wholesale, shall determine maximum prices. The amendment, effective March 26, also requires the stamping of the grade and weight class on cartons of eggs sold at retail and makes minor changes in the pricing of poultry.

Recruit Farm Labor.

Another factor on the food front was Wickard's announcement that the government of the Bahama Islands had agreed to permit up to 5,000 Bahaman workers over 18 years of age to go to Florida and other states to help with the crops. Recruiting in the islands, which are under British rule, will begin at once. Under an agreement reached with Mexico last summer, 600 Mexican workers signed up this week for employment on United States farms.

The war production board is expected soon to make more agricultural machinery available for farms, and Rubber Director William Jeffers today announced the release from inventory of enough wide base tires to equal the number of parts which are in manufacturers' hands to complete the fabrication of between 13,000 and 14,000 farm tractors.

JAP CHIEF IN CHINA REPORTED NAMED.

New York, March 20 (AP).—A Tokio broadcast recorded by the office of war information said the Japanese war ministry announced today appointment of Lt. Gen. Takuro Matsui as supreme chief of staff of the China expeditionary force.

When constipation brings on discomfort after meals, stomach upset, bloating, dizzy spells, gas, coated tongue, and bad breath, your stomach is probably "crying the blues" because your bowels don't move. It calls for Laxative-Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels, combined with Syrup Pepsin for perfect ease to your stomach in taking. For years, many Doctors have given pepsin preparations in their prescriptions to make medicine more agreeable to a touchy stomach. So be sure your laxative contains Syrup Pepsin. Insist on Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Senna combined with Syrup Pepsin. See how wonderfully the Laxative Senna wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your intestines to bring welcome relief from constipation. And the good old Syrup Pepsin makes this laxative so comfortable and easy on your stomach. Even finicky children love the taste of this pleasant family laxative. Take Dr. Caldwell's Laxative Senna combined with Syrup Pepsin, as directed on label or as your doctor advises, and feel world's better. Get genuine Dr. Caldwell's.

WINTER COLDEST SINCE 1904, SAYS HEATING EXPERT

Urges OPA to Announce Next Season's Plan.

Chicago is experiencing the coldest winter in the last 39 years, Theodore L. Condron, Oak Park heating engineer, asserted yesterday in urging that the office of price administration provide additional relief for fuel oil users and announce its rationing plans for the 1943-'44 heating season within 30 days.

After analyzing weather bureau statistics on this heating season thru Friday, Condron asserted that 5,689 degree days have accumulated, or 1½ per cent more cold than for the entire 1941-'42 season and 22 per cent more than was recorded in the corresponding period ending March 19, 1942. He estimated this season would be about 25 per cent colder than last.

"Degree Day" Is Explained.

"Degree days" are the yardstick used by weather men and heating engineers to record cold weather. A "degree day" is each degree that the mean temperature outdoors falls below 65 degrees above zero. Thus when the mean temperature outside is 50, 15 degree days are recorded.

Condron estimated that the degree days this season will pass the 7,000 mark for the first time in 39 years. The coldest winter was the 1872-'73 season, with 7,783 degree days. The most recent year in which degree days passed the 7,000 mark was in the 1903-'04 season when the total was 7,621.

Urges Increase Now.

Predicting that many fuel oil users in the Chicago area probably will exhaust their supplies in May, Condron urged the OPA to increase rations now to carry users thru the rationing program's heating season which ends Sept. 30.

"Also, of utmost importance now is that OPA determine and announce its plans for rationing fuel oil for 1943-'44 within the next 30 days," Condron said. "Probably thousands of users of fuel oil will be obliged to convert their heating plants to coal. While it will be possible to do this in mild weather, it will require time, even if the necessary materials are not prohibited and if labor is available to make the changes."

Michael F. Mulcahy, Chicago metropolitan area OPA director, said that fuel oil consumers who can demonstrate they are suffering from undue hardship because their ration was too small will be granted relief.

The OPA fuel oil division in Washington, Mulcahy said, is preparing a new rationing program and has requested statistical information from typical counties. In Cook county, 24 OPA investigators under Walter Archer are examining the records of every 50th applicant for fuel oil. Statistical information will be forwarded to the OPA fuel oil division Wednesday night.

Washington, D. C., March 20.—The department of justice announced today it estimated 1,436,748 major crimes were committed in the United States during 1942.

J. Edgar Hoover, director of the federal bureau of investigation, revealed a crime was committed every 21.9 seconds, on the average, during 1942. A felonious homicide took place every 45.4 minutes, and rape was committed every 52 minutes. Some other felonious assault was inflicted every 10.09 minutes, while a citizen was robbed every 11.2 minutes. A burglary took place every 1.97 minutes during 1942, and some one stole an automobile every 3.14 minutes.

Arrests of minor girls during 1942 increased 55.7 per cent over the previous year, while arrests of boys under 21 decreased 3.6 per cent. Finger print cards received at the FBI of arrested women increased 21.7 per cent over 1941, and male arrests decreased 10 per cent.

CHURCH RECEIVES SUPPLEMENT TO FUEL OIL RATION

After repeated appeals since Feb. 3, St. Francis Episcopal church and parish house at 2514 Thorndale avenue, received a supplemental ration of 970 gallons of fuel oil yesterday, the Rev. David J. Reid, pastor, reported.

Until the extra ration was delivered Father Reid said that since that date, when his wife returned home with their new born child, he had been obliged because of the oil shortage, to keep the heat in the house reduced to an average of 59 degrees. He also was forced to cancel a parish retreat on Feb. 28.

Father Reid said the extra ration will probably be adequate for the remainder of the season. The supplemental ration increased his allotment from 4,770 to 5,740 gallons for the church and house, compared with 6,500 gallons used in the preceding year.

MARYLAND BILL REDUCES INCOME TAX ONE-THIRD

Annapolis, Md., March 20 (AP).—Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor said today he planned to sign a bill permitting a one-third reduction in state income taxes Monday night. He also disclosed that new legislation permitting certain other discounts would be presented to the assembly. The income tax bill, which, it was estimated, would result in a savings to taxpayers of 12 million dollars on 1942, 1943, and 1944 incomes, was passed by the senate yesterday and sent to the governor. The bill leaves tax rates unchanged, but would permit taxpayers after calculating their returns to deduct 33⅓ per cent before making payment.

U. S. CAN'T AFFORD RUML PLAN, HOUSE GROUP DECIDES

BY WILLIAM STRAND.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., March 20.—The Ruml plan for pay-as-you-go income taxes is a luxury which war-time America cannot afford, majority members of the ways and means committee asserted today. This is no time for experiment, they said, with a record deficit in prospect, a mounting debt limit and inevitable higher taxes as the cost of victory over the axis.

In a 27 page majority report on the new tax legislation, the committee formally recommended passage of the administration approved proposal for a revised tax collection system including a 20 per cent withholding levy for wage and salary earners to start July 1.

The Ruml plan, which calls for skipping last year's taxes to achieve current collections, was severely criticized on the ground that it would deprive the treasury of revenue needed for war financing and bestow unjust benefits on high income taxpayers. The report said the latter probably have saved the money to meet their obligations anyway, and release of the funds would imperil the anti-inflation program.

G. O. P. to Push Ruml Plan.

A minority report signed by the eight Republicans who voted against the committee bill is expected to be filed Monday. The G. O. P. contingent vigorously supported the Ruml plan, which was rejected by the majority, and have announced their intention of introducing it from the floor.

Today's report lauding the committee plan bore the signature of Chairman Robert L. Doughton [D., N. C.] and presumably expressed the view of the other 16 members.

Under the committee proposal, no direct abatement of taxes would be allowed but taxpayers would be encouraged to go on a current basis voluntarily thru bargain discounts for payment of current taxes before they become due, if the prior year's obligations have been met in full.

The majority members painted a dire picture of the financial shape of things to come. They said the nation is faced with a 71 billion dollar deficit for the next fiscal year and the new record debt limit of 210 billions, recently approved by the house, will probably be reached by June 30, 1944. The present debt limit is 125 billions.

Heavier Taxes Foreseen.

And, they added, President Roosevelt has requested congress to raise an additional 16 billions in new revenue thru higher taxes or enforced savings or both. Heavier taxes to meet the request are inevitable, the report stated, whereas adoption of the Ruml plan would mean forgiving 10 billions in anticipated revenue on 1942 taxes.

The committee's optional pay-as-you-go plan provides discounts ranging up to 6 per cent on 1943 taxes paid ahead of time after 1942 taxes have been paid. In succeeding years the top discount rate would be 4 per cent.

It also carries benefits for men and women in the army and navy, giving them a basic exemption of $3,500 against their service pay, retroactive to income of last year, and erasing back income tax charges for all under arms who die during the war, beginning with Pearl Harbor.

The Ruml plan is embodied in a bill introduced by Rep. Frank Carlson [R., Kas.] which the minority members have promised to call up from the floor. It also provides for a 20 per cent withholding tax to start July 1.

Bedford, Ky., March 20 (AP).—Mrs. Gracie Dickerson, 22 years old, Madison Tenn., and her son, 3, were drowned today, and Mrs. Dickerson's sister, Miss Lurlyne Sutton, Madison, was rescued, when the three were swept down the flooded Little Kentucky river after stepping off a stalled bus.

How to make a WAR GARDEN

BY BEN MARKLAND.

Two of the commonly grown members of the cabbage family that are easy to cultivate in small home gardens are broccoli and kohlrabi.

The Italian green sprouting variety of broccoli is raised almost every year in the vegetable plots on the Tribune farm. It grows to a height of two and a half feet, and produces a large terminal head, as well as numerous lateral sprouts that are edible. Florists will produce broccoli seedlings this season, and these can be transplanted into the garden at the same time that cabbage plants are put in: About April 20 to May 1 in northern Illinois. Broccoli will stand light frosts.

Methods of Planting Broccoli.

Altho the preferred method of growing broccoli is that of transplanting seedlings started in greenhouses it is possible to sow the seeds in the garden between April 10 and 20; when grown by this method the plants will mature in August and early September. Whether grown from seed or transplanted from the greenhouse, broccoli plants should stand 24 inches apart in the row, and the rows should be at least 24 inches apart.

Broccoli is very susceptible to cabbage worms, and therefore must be sprayed at least once a week. This is especially important as the plants reach final growth. A pyrethrum spray, the same as used for all members of the cabbage family, will kill cabbage worms. Pyrethrum is available in powdered and liquid form under various trade names.

Altho kohlrabi is a member of the cabbage family, it grows more like the common root crops. It may be planted from seed at any period of the growing season, but thrives best when planted for cool weather maturity: That is, in early spring [April 1 to 15], or midsummer [June 15 to Aug. 1]. The early white Vienna and early purple varieties are recommended for this area.

Kohlrabi seeds should be sown thinly, and seedlings should be thinned to stand three to four inches apart in the row. These vegetables are most palatable if harvested when slightly larger than an egg.

Kohlrabi is not commonly attacked by insects or diseases, but should be sprayed for cabbage worms when the other members of the cabbage family are treated.

Search Attic, Urges ODT; Might Be a Bicycle in It!

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—The office of defense transportation today suggested a search of attics and cellars for bicycles—to relieve overburdened buses and street cars. The ODT said such a search probably would turn up several thousand bicycles.

'GESTAPO' BILL IS ASSAILED BY BAR CHAIRMAN

Grants of powers proposed by the so-called "gestapo" bill pending in congress were criticized sharply last night by Benjamin Wham, chairman of the federal legislation committee of the Chicago Bar association. The bill is being urged by the department of justice as a war security measure designed to strengthen laws covering sabotage.

In addition to "striking at the freedom of the press," a provision requiring citizens to inform on their neighbors would "destroy the relations of lawyers and clients," Wham said. He predicted that delegates to the American Bar association convention in Chicago March 28 and 29 would resist the measure, which provides heavy penalties for various "hostile acts."

Wham said sections of the bill relating to "acquiring, possessing, or transmitting information" may "readily give rise to unfounded prosecutions." He pointed out that any information regarding the war could come under this definition and tend to make us a "nation of spies."

WARMERDAM BREAKS WORLD VAULT RECORD

BY MARK COX.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Champaign, Ill., March 20.—Paris succeeded where Moline failed tonight when the Tigers walked off George Huff gymnasium floor at the University of Illinois with the state prep basketball title. Seven times in the last eight years the Tigers had come to the state basketball finals and six times they went back home with nothing more to show for it than the ride. Ten times the Maroons had made the long trek from the northwest portion of the state, eight of these coming in the last decade, and their visits had been equally in vain.

Tonight a sharp breaking, always alert Paris team was not to be denied. It took its permanent lead as early as the first four minutes of play and then went about its business to win by the final score of 46 to 37.

Crowd Breaks Meet Record.

Cheering the Tigers on tonight was a crowd of 7,196 nerve racked spectators who formed part of the three day aggregate of 48,915 which exceeded last year's record attendance of 48,278.

The Paris team which went forth tonight was not the one which had yielded to Moline, 37 to 34, when the teams met in a regular season game which snapped an 18 game winning streak for the Tigers. Neither was it the group which bowed to Centralia, 35 to 33, in the final game here just a year ago.

This was the hustling, driving band of Tigers which had contributed the highest score in a single game in the 36 year annals of the state finals on opening night by submerging Joliet, 74 to 40. This same well balanced squad had followed with a 45 to 34 victory over a surprisingly strong K[illegible]lyn Park five in the quarter-finals of the meet, and a last quarter 53 to 50 triumph over Roy Gatewood and his Salem mates in the semi-finals only this afternoon.

Paris Never in Serious Trouble.

The team, which closed its season tonight with its 37th victory in 39 games this season, was never really in serious trouble as little Gordon Taylor showed the way with six baskets for 12 points. Delbert Glover was just a shot behind with five field goals for 10.

Moline, which had beaten Elgin, 45 to 39, in the afternoon, kept within striking distance of the triumphant Tigers thruout the early stages of the night game, thanks to the timely firing of stocky Frankie De Meyer. When De Meyer left the game midway in the third period on four fouls, it was husky Cal Anders who stepped into the breach and carried on as best the Tigers would allow.

The tournament, declared best in the 36 year history of the event because of the closely contested games and strong team and individual performances, contributed four other records on which future squads will train their sights, but they were direct results of the consolation contest and its personnel in which Salem took third place over Elgin. Two of the records were contributed by Salem's

BY CHARLES BARTLETT.

Indianapolis, Ind., March 20.—Murray Mendenhall Sr., the old De Pauw university player, has coached Fort Wayne Central quintets since 1924, but in six appearances in the finals before this evening, his boys have been denied the big one. But maybe it was worth the wait. For tonight, it was his own son, Murray Jr., who sparked Central to a stirring 45 to 40 triumph over Lebanon's Tigers in the 33d annual windup to Hoosierdom's high school basketball tournament.

Murray Jr., a 150 pound 17 year old, in proving that dribbling is not a lost art, managed the victors' attack thruout. This was done in spite of a twisted muscle in his right leg, suffered at the start of the second half. And the cool kid with the crew haircut didn't stop at dribbling finesse and floor direction. He also scored four field goals and two free throws to lead all Central scorers.

Van Ryn Helps, Too.

Young Mendenhall was by no means the whole show of Central's first title victory. There was Bob Van Ryn, a big rugged youth who excelled on long set shots. There was Charley Stanski, a perfect complement to Mendenhall at guard. And there was Jim Blanks, a skinny colored lad whose forte is tipping in baskets. Each of this trio scored nine points.

No story of the game would be complete without a bow to the losers. Lebanon, displaying the same adult self-possession it had shown in the semi-finals at Hammond last week, paid no attention to the fact that it trailed by 10 points late in the third period. These Tigers merely bounced back with a furious rally that brought them within two points, 40 to 38, with four minutes to go.

There they made the mistake of attempting floor long passes, an error on which the uniformly taller Central five was quick to capitalize. It was 41 to 38 with a minute to go, and Fort Wayne made the most of its height to drive in for two finishing baskets before little Ralph Houser, smallest and smartest of the Lebanons, stole the ball for the Tigers' final thrust just before the gun sounded.

Lebanon Uses Only Five.

Houser, gangling Pete Mount, Dave Laflin, Bob Agan, and Bob Truitt played the entire game for Lebanon. Houser led all scorers with 14 points, while Mount got 11, and Laflin, 9. Laflin was awarded the Gimbel medal, the prize annually given to the tournament player displaying the best sportsmanship and all around ability.

Fort Wayne Central adherents rushed onto the floor after the game to hoist two of the players onto their shoulders. They cut down the basket nettings for souvenirs. They've been a long time going to Central's trophy room. In 1926, 1927, 1928, 1930, 1936, and 1937, the champions reached the finals, but their best effort was reaching the championship game of 1936, which they lost to Frankfort.

Lebanon Takes Lead.

Houser made good on a pair of throws off of Stanski's foul early in the first quarter of the title game for a 2 to 0 Lebanon edge. After Shopoff had matched these points with a one hander, Mount of Lebanon delivered another pair from the penalty line after Armstrong fouled him. Shopoff came thru with another push shot, but Houser got a set shot from the side.

Stanski fired in a long one to tie it again, 6 to 6, then added a free throw to give Central its first lead. Truitt of Lebanon clicked on a free throw, only to have Van Ryn tip in a basket. Agan then made it seven free throws in as many attempts for Lebanon with a pair. Mendenhall of Central next took time out from his

Work Out Tomorrow in French Lick.

The Cubs yesterday transacted some more last minute business before their scheduled arrival in French Lick, Ind., tomorrow for the opening of their war curtailed spring training program.

Glen Russell, first baseman and utility infielder, was sold to Los Angeles of the Pacific Coast league. The Cub's roster was further whacked when John McPartland, rookie southpaw from Dallas, reported that he expected to be inducted in the army within a month and will not show up at the Hoosier base.

Russell told Cub officials that he was reluctant to leave his chicken farm, which is only 20 miles from the Los Angeles ball park. It is likely that had he left the care of his prize fowls in other hands he would have been fair game for the draft board. As it is, he may restrict himself to playing only when the Angels are at home.

Two First Basemen Left.

Russell's departure and Jimmy Foxx's recent retirement announcement leave the Cubs with two first basemen, Phil Cavarretta and Heinz Becker. Both will be in the Cub party which will leave the Dearborn Street station on the Monon at 9:15 o'clock tonight for French Lick, with Traveling Secretary Bob Lewis in charge.

Becker arrived in town yesterday, shook hands with General Jim Gallagher, and made a short visit to Milwaukee, where he was something of a hero as a slugging Brewer last season. Heinz is determined to give Cavarretta a tussle for the first base job. He hit .340 for the Brewers.

Peanuts Lowrey, the little outfielder who failed in his first trial with the Cubs, wired officials that he will be late in reporting because of the serious illness of his child.

Contrast to Other Years.

The Cubs' leavetaking tonight will be in sharp contrast to their grandiose spring training excursions to Catalina Island the last two decades. For the first time in years they will not be represented at their camp by a top-flight official. Neither Owner P. K. Wrigley nor Gallagher will witness the opening drills, tho the general manager may visit the place later.

Included in the group leaving Chicago will be Secretary Lewis, Coach Kiki Cuyler, Third Baseman Stan Hack, Pitchers Ray Prim, Ed Hanyzewski, Kewpie Barrett, Les Fleming, and Paul Erickson, Shortstop Len Merullo, Catcher Al Todd, Outfielder Dom Dallessandro, Cavarretta, and Becker. Others will go direct from their homes to French Lick.

Arrival is scheduled at 6 o'clock, but the car will be sidelined for two hours, thus sparing the tourists an early arising. Jim Wilson, Cub manager who has been in French Lick for several days, may get down to the station as part of a two man welcoming committee. It's a cinch that Andy Lotshaw, the trainer, will be there to take charge of the baggage.

Novikoff Not Satisfied.

Contract negotiations with the Cub players have been kept a secret by the front office. At least one of the players, Lou Novikoff has broken the silence by declaring he was not satisfied. Novikoff may show up and again he may not. Because of the silent policy maintained by Gallagher, there may be others who have not signed and who will be officially classed as holdouts if they don't show up tomorrow. Novikoff, a man with strong family ties, says he was offered $6,500, which is $3,500 under his personally estimated value.

POPS PICKS LOSES TO NOONDAY SUN, A DERBY RIVAL

New Orleans, La., March 20 (AP).—Ben F. Whitaker's Pops Picks, which received considerable Kentucky Derby consideration recently, after defeating Ocean Wave, was defeated today in the $5,000 Fort Livingston handicap at the Fair Grounds.

The Texas-owned colt was second by a head to Mrs. Payne Whitney's Noonday Sun, also a Derby nominee. The race was run on a sloppy track with the winner clocked in 1:13 3-5. The victor carried 114 pounds to the 120 loaded on Pops Pick. The Coldstream stable's Reaping Glory was third, a half length behind the top two.

Mt. Olive and Gethsemane Reach Walther Semi-Finals

Mount Olive edged out St. Paul of Grand Crossing, 28 to 26, last night in the quarter-final round of the Walther league junior basketball tournament in St. Stephen's gymnasium, 65th and Peoria streets. Gethsemane reached the semi-finals with a 35 to 17 victory over Tabor. The semi-finals and finals will be played next Sunday.

APPLING, MOSES AGREE TO TERMS; JOIN SOX SOON

French Lick, Ind., March 20.—The West Baden ball park today was the only subject remaining to fret Manager James Dykes of the Chicago White Sox. Outfielder Wally Moses, the sole remaining holdout, signed his contract and will report Monday, but the ball park is under three feet of water and not likely to be available for use within the next 10 days.

Luke Appling agreed to terms today and sent word to Manager Dykes that he will leave Atlanta, Ga., Monday. Unless Luke loses his way, as he has done on occasion when traffic was much less complicated than now, the veteran shortstop should be here Tuesday. Earlier Dykes had said he had only the faintest hope that he would see Appling before April 1. Jim was very happy to learn of the projected early arrival.

Tresh Solves Mystery.

Some hours before the surprise information on Appling was received Catcher Mike Tresh solved the mystery about his own status by the very satisfactory process of showing up in person. Mike, usually one of the first signers and early bird arrivals in camp, had caused some concern by failing to sign or comment on his contract, or answer letters, telegrams, or long distance telephone calls.

Outfielder Moose Solters, Pennsylvania farmer and tavern host, has ended his salary conferences in a manner pleasing to all and says he will be here as soon as he can hire help. It is presumed he is finding it more difficult to get help on his farm than in his saloon.

Pitcher Johnny Humphries, granted an extension, has found he didn't need as much time at his home as he thought and has sent word he'll be here tomorrow.

Outfielder Guy Curtright, obtained from St. Paul, arrived this morning and rounded out the roster total to 20. This left only nine to show up, including Appling, Solters, and Humphries.

While tons of water still were standing over the Sox field in West Baden and the Cubs' field near by was at the bottom of a temporary lake, the Sox took a fairly good workout outdoors and finished off with some tossing indoors.

The outdoor activities included a

Senior Championship Game.
Mount Carmel [South] vs. St. George [North] at Lane Tech, Addison street and Western avenue, 8 p. m.

Mount Carmel High school, defending Catholic league junior basketball champion, beat Leo, 23 to 22, last night at Chicago Teachers college to capture the south section title. Mount Carmel is expected to meet Weber Tuesday evening for the league championship and the right to oppose Marshall, City league junior titleholder in the Stadium Saturday.

Last night's game was the final of the playoffs to decide the south section championship. At the close of the sectional race, three teams, Mount Carmel, Leo, and Catholic High of Joliet, were tied for first place with 10 victories and 2 defeats each. Leo won the toss and Mount Carmel defeated Catholic High, 32 to 29, Friday evening to qualify as Leo's opponent.

The Carmelites had to come from behind to win the championship. Leo went into an early lead which it maintained at the half, 17 to 15. Oscar O'Neill, Carvaran guard and leading scorer of the game, then tied the score with a long basket. Willie Thomas put Carmel ahead, 19 to 17, with a push-in, as the Lions went scoreless during the third period.

Steve Flaherty tied the score for Leo with a hook shot, but O'Neill countered with a long basket. Flaherty, the only Leo player to score in the second half, then made good on two free throw attempts again tying the score, this time at 21 to 21.

With only one and a half minutes to play, Capt. Bert. Wilson sent the Carmelites ahead, 23 to 21, with a push-in shot. On Wilson's foul Flaherty made good on one of his two attempts and the game ended with the winners controling the ball.

The victory was Mount Carmel's second of the season over Leo in three attempts, and was also its 25th against only 6 losses, two of which were suffered in league play. Mount Carmel's other league defeat was administered by Catholic High. Lineup:

GOLDEN GLOVERS PREPARE FOR FIGHT LOVING NEW YORK TEAM

Chicago Front

BY HOWARD BARRY.

Chicago's Intercity Golden Gloves squad faces a final week of concentrated action in preparation for the Intercity matches with New York. During the next six or seven days the fighters will be brought up to top condition and then will go coasting along till it's time to respond to the bell for the opening bout on Wednesday of the following week—March 31.

The 16th annual meeting between the Golden Gloves boxers of Chicago and New York promises to be one of the most brilliantly fought in the history of this spectacular series. The easterners showed terrific hitting power in their tournament, which closed last Wednesday. The Chicago boys, therefore, are bracing themselves to withstand a powerful invasion.

The Chicagoans will be seeking to regain the Intercity title which they yielded last year, 9 to 7, after maintaining supremacy thru a series of closely scored victories or at least ties since 1935. New York's last previous victory had been accomplished by a 9 to 7 margin in 1934.

If the New Yorkers should win it would be a new experience for Chicago spectators. Tho the local boys have been pretty hard pressed on many occasions, they've never got worse than a tie in their home ring. That tie occurred in the first match of the series in 1928. There have been two other 8 to 8 deadlocks, in 1936 and 1940—both in New York. Chicago has won eight to New York's four, but the series hasn't been as one-sided as that implies because in many cases the decision hung on the outcome of a single bout.

Janiro a Target.

With the brilliant puncher—Jackie Floyd—sparking up the New Yorker's attack, one bout looms very important this time, also. That's the featherweight championship encounter between Floyd and Tony Janiro, Youngstown, O., boy who was one of the sensations of the recent Golden Gloves tournament.

The New York coach, Bill Bradley, had seen Janiro in action against Jackie Graves in the finals. Graves, a veteran southpaw who had won Golden Glove and intercity championships last year, was nailed frequently by Janiro's sharp punches. The New York coach, however, ventured the opinion that Janiro was successful because he had been well trained to

Eastern Sector

BY BILL MURTHA.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, March 20.—With a lift and drive that had the coaches gasping in astonishment, the 1943 Eastern Golden Gloves Champions opened training here this afternoon. Maybe it's the incentive—New York's best chance to beat the Chicagoans in Chicago Stadium in years—but probably it's because these boxers from the Atlantic seaboard just love to fight and don't care whether it's in Madison Square Garden or in the obscurity of the gym.

Most fighters don't care for gym work. They train only because they have to, under the incessant prodding of their handlers. These fellows even like roadwork.

They're Convinced They're Good.

Make no mistake about it, you Chicagoans, these lads are out to win. It's in every move they make, in their every action in the ring, in every other line in their conversation. It isn't the Maxie Baer type of conversation either, talking big to keep their spirits up. They're privately convinced they're good and they have no intention of letting any band of midwesterners prove otherwise.

Because two days had elapsed since the finals of the New York tournament, the boys hadn't been working out at all, sparring was on tap this afternoon. They trotted two miles in Central park at 6 a. m., and assembled for the workout in the C. Y. O. gym at 2 p. m.

Palou Is a Southpaw.

Palou is a southpaw like Graves, and also like the Minneapolis lad he's rough and tough. Cooper is being schooled in the southpaw style. George will make a worthy opponent for a Graves at his best. He lost in the finals to Jackie Floyd, the greatest eastern prospect since Ray Robinson, and if the fight had gone another round it might have been a different story.

Constantly on the move, a deadly right handed hitter, he would have coasted to the championship in a year

Dodds Home First in Bankers' Mile.

BY WILFRID SMITH.

Cornelius Warmerdam, the only man ever to pole vault higher than 15 feet, last night broke his own world record in this event in the Chicago relays in the Stadium. The lithe youngster, competing for the first time under the colors of North Carolina Navy Pre-flight school, vaulted 15 feet, 8½ inches.

They call the Carolina Navy men "Cloudbusters." Last night Warmerdam gave new meaning to the familiarity. On his sixth vault of the night—he began competition at 14 feet—Warmerdem created his record. It not only betters his own indoor mark of 15 feet, 7¼ inches, which he established a year ago in Boston, but it is the best ever done indoors or out. Warmerdam's outdoor world record is 15 feet, 7¾ inches, which he made May 23, 1942, in Modesto, Cal.

Big Crowd Is Thrilled.

A near capacity crowd of 13,970 watched a night of thrills in the seventh Chicago relays. Many had come only to see Warmerdam's assault on his meet record and with a hope he might break the world mark.

On his second trial Warmerdam cleared 14 feet, 6 inches, at which height all other competitors were beaten. Then, the champion required two trials to clear 15 feet, 1⅝ inches as he went under the bar on his first. When Warmerdam got over at this height it was his 31st vault of 15 feet.

The bar was then raised to 15 feet, 3⅝ inches. Warmerdam went over easily and broke his Relays record of 1942 of 15 feet, 2 inches. Then the officials carefully measured the height for the next jump. The announcer intoned the figure.

Then the Pay-Off!

The huge crowd sat silently as Warmerdam walked to the extreme end of his runway at the northeast corner of the building. He poised a second on tiptoes, then sprinted down the track. Smoothly, with the speed of a sprinter, Warmerdam raced to the pit, jabbed his pole into the box, and soared into the air. At the top of his swing he arched his body over the bar and sprawled down into the sawdust pit. Almost before he landed, the thousands burst forth with a Niagara of cheers that was an accolade to the greatest pole vaulter in history.

Later Warmerdam tried three times to vault 16 feet, ½ inch, an astronomical measurement in the history of the event. That he missed on each was no anti-climax in view of his previous feats.

Warmerdam stole the show from the world's greatest two miler, Greg Rice of Notre Dame, who now competes for the New York Athletic club. Rice won the two mile feature, final event of the night, and it was his 63d consecutive victory, but while Greg bettered 9 minutes, he did not threaten his own indoor mark of 8:51.1, made in the same meet two years ago.

Hunter Is Far Behind.

Rice's time for the 22 laps was 8:55.9. For 19 laps Ollie Hunter, Notre Dame senior, held his place, a stride behind the diminutive champion. Then, as Greg turned on his finishing sprint, Hunter fell behind and finished 35 yards in the rear. Both lapped the other contestants and Rice passed them twice. Rice's fractional times were: Quarter, 63 seconds; half mile, 2:10; three quarters, 3:18; mile, 4:27; mile and a quarter, 5:36; mile and half, 6:46, and mile and three quarters, 7:55.

He ran the last quarter mile in 60 9-10 seconds.

Gil Dodds, Ashland, O., college graduate, now a divinity student in Boston, took secondary honors when he ran the fastest indoor mile of the 1943 season to win the Bankers' mile. Dodds took the lead at the start and ran his field into the boards. His time was 4:08.5.

Dodds whipped Earl Mitchell of Indiana, by 10 yards. Mitchell was a half a stride ahead of Frank Dixon, New York university freshman, the National A. A. U. indoor champion. This was the second fastest mile ever run in Chicago indoors. The Chicago Relays record of 4:07.9, which Chuck Fenske of Wisconsin set in 1940, is the best mile ever contested in Chicago.

Dixon Finally Falls Back.

Dixon stayed on Dodds' heels for two laps, but at the end of the third lap, Dodds had a six yard advantage. The time for the quarter was 59 seconds. At the half mile, run by Dodds in two minutes, the Boston man had moved ahead by 15 yards. On the seventh lap Dodds was 20 yards ahead, and on the next lap Mitchell came from fourth place to pass Bill Scott of Michigan State and Dixon. Mitchell then was 15 yards behind the leader.

Michigan's two mile relay team won this event and came within a tenth of a second of the meet record. Notre Dame faltered in the last leg and Illinois, the dark horse, took second place from the Irish. Notre Dame, however, won the mile relay and gained

Phillip Gets W-G-N Trophy.

At half time two members of the Illinois Big Ten championship basketball were given awards. Andy Phillip, who broke almost every individual scoring record in the Big Ten books the last season, received the W-G-N most valuable player trophy. Grayle Howlett, W-G-N sports editor, and Jack Brickhouse, W-G-N sports announcer, made the presentation. Phillip then introduced other members of the championship team.

The other presentation went to Jack Smiley in the form of the Ralf Woods memorial trophy for attaining the highest percentage in free throws during the season. Walt Wessman, university field secretary, presented Smiley the trophy in behalf of the Rockford Alumni association which sponsors the award.

Frankie DeMeyer opened the scoring in the final by outmaneuvering his guard to tally from close in for Moline. Two minutes later he repeated the precedure after Gordon Taylor had counted for Paris. Dick Foley made good on two free throws to tie the score at 4 to 4. Taylor put Paris out in front again and Delbert Glover batted one in to help the cause along with 6 minutes gone. DeMeyer closed the quarter with a short shot to leave Moline trailing, 8 to 6.

In the second quarter Paris moved into command. Foley and Norman combined to put the Tigers in front, 12 to 6, before Albert Van Landuyt opened the scoring for the Maroons. Dave Humerickhouse offset this for Paris, but Cal Anders came right back with a pair of free throws for Moline. Taylor and DeMeyer traded baskets and Norman slipped in a free throw to bring the count to 17 to 12.

Paris Leads at Half, 21-16.

Glover flipped one in from the corner and after DeMeyer had contributed four points to Moline's cause on a basket and a pair of free throws, Glover connected again to put Paris in front, 21 to 16, at half time.

Norman and Taylor scored in rapid succession to open the third period and then Humerickhouse cashed in on a free throw awarded him on DeMeyer's fourth misdemeanor. DeMeyer had scored Moline's six points in the first quarter and added an equal number in the second period.

Jim Grafton added a free throw for the Northwest champions and Foley countered with a basket for Paris. Bill Hall tossed two thru in short order, but Paul Pedersen came right back for Paris with a long one and added a free throw to bring the count to 31 to 21. Anders then drove under the rim to tally.

Pedersen and Hall exchanged free throws, and Glover slipped a basket thru on the dead run. Norman was successful at the free throw line. Then LeRoy Skantz, DeMeyer's replacement, connected on a pivot effort to bring the score to 35 to 26 at the beginning of the final period.

Anders took a rebound and laid it back up as the fourth quarter opened. Pedersen retaliated by driving past Skantz to hit a short shot. Anders was active again under the basket and the score read Paris, 38; Moline, 30, at the automatic time out with four minutes to play.

Then Moline made its bid. Anders shouldered his way thru a mixup at the free throw line and scored. Van Landuyt drove under the board and added the free throw alloted him on the play to reduce the margin to 38 to 35, but that was as far as it went. Foley took a pass-off from Humerickhouse for a lay-in shot and Taylor flicked in two one-handed efforts to clinch the game. Grafton and Taylor contributed anti-climax baskets.

Gatewood of Salem Sets 2 State Tourney Scoring Marks

Champaign, Ill., March 20.—Roy [The Great] Gatewood and his basketball buddies from Salem high gained the most consolation of any third place state high school final team when they contributed to four records in beating Elgin, 69 to 58, in Huff gynasium tonight.

Gatewood's accomplishments overshadowed the high geared scoring machine of the team as he erased two of the fabulous Dwight Eddleman's scoring marks and then personally escorted his team to two more as a group.

Breaks Eddleman's Record.

The blond, one-handed jump shot expert contributed the following in the way of records:

1. Scored 29 points in the final game against Elgin to exceed Eddleman's high of 26 under the modern rules, which the Centralia star compiled last year.

2. Contributed 96 points in the four tournament games to surpass the 72 point aggregate of Eddleman in 1942.

With Gatewood showing the way, the team also combined with Elgin to establish two other marks. They were:

1. The 58 points by Elgin formed the highest total ever compiled by a losing team in the state finals meet.

2. The combined score of Salem and Elgin of 127 established a new high for two teams in a single game in the tourney.

Elgin Has Two High Scorers.

Only Gatewood and his mates kept a high scoring Elgin five from gaining more recognition. In addition to the Maroons' part in setting two marks, Bob Menke and Bob Morton also scored 18 and 17 points, respectively, to put them high among the tournament's leading scorers. Morton finished his four days' work with 58 points and Menke with 53.

When the 6 foot 2 inch 190 pound all-state football end finally broke Eddleman's individual mark tonight it came as no surprise to those who had attended the sessions during the last three days. He came within a point of it the opening day when he scored 25 points in bringing his team from apparently sure defeat to victory in the last seconds of play.

Against Champaign in another photo finish the next night he poured in an even 20 points and again pulled the game out of the fire in the final minute when he scored from out in the court, and then added a free throw to put the Wildcats into the semi-finals.

In the semi-final contest with the Paris Tigers he maintained his scoring pace with 22 points, but couldn't quite carry the burden of victory against the team from the broom corn capitol of the world.

Altho Salem previously has had two trips to state finals it was the first appearance of Gatewood, and also his coach, Quinn Constantz. Constantz, a young chap who was not even head coach at the start of the year, was more tickled than Gatewood himself.

He's Team's Best Feeder.

"How about his passing too?" he asked. "He's the best feeder we have and seldom makes a mistake in where to throw that ball. His defensive play is just as important to us, and while we're speaking in compliments, let me point out how well he covers on defense.

"Did I teach him that peculiar jump shot where he apparently is falling away from the basket when he lets loose of the ball? Well, not exactly, but I did tell him about a boy named Clay Cooper at Missouri who used such a shot and then he worked out his own version of it."

And then Constantz, who came to Salem as assistant coach this year from Boonville, Mo., high, summed it up. "He's got everything, hasn't he?" He has.

BEN HOGAN HAS DATE THURSDAY WITH THE ARMY

Fort Worth, Tex., March 20 (AP).—Ben Hogan, the National Open champion, soon will start swinging at the enemy instead of at golf balls, if the army's willing. He'll be inducted next Thursday.

PHILLIPS OILERS DEFEAT DENVER FOR A. A. U. TITLE

Denver, Colo., March 20 (AP).—The Phillips Oilers of Bartlesville, Okla., with a dazzling attack, won the National A. A. U. basketball championship tonight by beating Denver American Legion, the defending champion, 57 to 40. In the game for third place, the University of Wyoming whipped the University of Denver, 58 to 45.

EVEN HOCKEY SERIES.

Hershey, Pa., March 20 [AP].—The Buffalo Bisons trounced the Hershey Bears, 5 to 2, here tonight and evened the Play-off series between the two top ranking teams in the American Hocky league at one victory each.

CATHOLIC FIVES MEET FOR SENIOR CROWN TONIGHT

Victor Plays Kelvyn Park in Stadium Saturday.

For nine years, high school football fans annually have watched the champions from the City and Catholic leagues battle in Soldiers' field for the city-wide championship. Now high school basketball fans will have the opportunity of watching the senior and junior champions from the same leagues battle for city titles next Saturday evening in the Stadium.

The City league was the first to qualify its champions for title games. Marshall, west section representative in the City league, won its fourth straight junior title by defeating Harrison, 47 to 34, and Kelvyn Park, also from the west section, captured its first senior title with a 28 to 26 overtime victory over Lindblom, defending champion, on March 13.

Marshall will be the favorite to win the junior title no matter what team represents the Catholic league. The Commandos are undefeated since 1939 and their winning streak has reached 80 games.

Kelvyn Park Unbeaten.

The Panthers from Kelvyn Park were undefeated in the regular season, rolling up an impressive string of 22 straight victories.

The Catholic league senior championship will be decided tonight when Mount Carmel, titlist from the south section, and St. George of Evanston, north section champion, meet at Lane Tech, Addison boulevard and Western avenue. The game will begin at 8 o'clock. Mount Carmel's league record is 11 victories against one defeat while St. George won 10 and lost 2.

Weber, north section junior champion, will meet Mount Carmel, south section junior title playoff winner, Tuesday for the right to engage Marshall.

Mayor Sponsors Event.

Mayor Kelly is sponsor of the championship program and has been aided by A. H. Pritzlaff, director of physical education for the board of education, and the Rev. James E. McDonnell, president of the Catholic league, in making plans for the double header. Jack Anderson, director of the football game, also was selected as the director of the basketball games.

Upon the mayor's suggestion, the games will be played for the benefit of the Chicago Service Men's center as was the football title game last November. Nearly $100,000 was raised for the center thru the football game. The Stadium's seating capacity for a basketball game is approximately 20,000. Tonight's lineups:

Hakoahs and Necaxas Will Clash Today

A first division league replay between the Hakoahs and Necaxas will feature today's schedule of eight soccer games. The Necaxas were trailing the Hakoahs by one goal with only a few minutes left to play in their first clash when fights broke out and the game was called. The league ordered the re-play.

The long winter layoff has spoiled the Hakoahs' chances of victory, as several of their best players have been called to the service, but Manager Harry Field has been assured that Art Sheridan and Harold Wolf, stationed at Camp Grant will be granted leave to compete today. A victory will put the club on top in the fall league standings.

The Necaxas, who have been displaying fine form during the winter, have added strength to the team by the inclusion of Rodrigo Alfaro of Costa Rica, and Arrio Moriyon of Spain. The game will be played at 5400 Roosevelt road, starting at 2:30. The lineups:

HAKOAHS.		NECAXAS.
Stein	G.K.	Eastro

Substitutes: Hakoahs—M. Farbea, A. Schloss and A. Share. Necaxas—A. Obregon and R. Lazalde. Referee—Rudolph Basak.

One of the other matches will be between the Linneas and the Swedish Americans. The Swedes, who hold top position by a point over the Hakoahs, have lost no players to the service, but then the same is true of the Linneas. They will play at 59th and Paulina streets. Today's schedule: floor directing chore to shove in one from beneath the hoop. Houser tied it for the sixth time in the period by driving under the basket.

Here Blanks made two baskets in quick succession, one on a tip-in, the second in a long try. This gave Central a 15 to 11 advantage at the quarter's end.

Mount Gets Two in a Row.

Mount then went to work at the outset of the second quarter. He slipped thru the Fort Wayne defense for any easy push shot, and then, after Blanks had scored on a one hander, Mount and Laflin lured Central's defense into thinking that Laflin was going to try a long shot. Instead, he looped a flat pass to Mount, who scored easily and pared Central's lead to 17 to 15.

Mendenhall stepped in at this point, making a free throw and an under-the-basket shot. A long shot by Van Ryn gave Central a 22 to 15 lead. Laflin hit on a set shot, and Houser delivered another free throw. Mount's free throw brought Lebanon within three points at 22 to 19, but Stanski connected from far out. Laflin matched this one, but Mendenhall scored from the side for Central's half time margin of 26 to 21.

Central Draws Away.

Van Ryn of Fort Wayne opened the third period with a basket, but Laflin scored from far out and Mount drove underneath for a shot, then added a free throw to leave Lebanon only two points back. Blanks inserted a free throw at this point, and Stanski flipped thru a set effort for three Fort Wayne points. Houser's free throw was answered by a followup by Max Ramsey, Central sub forward. From there on, all Lebanon could garner was a pair of free throws, Blanks, Mendenhall, and Van Ryn adding five more points to give Fort Wayne a 38 to 29 margin going into the final quarter.

Lebanon then sent its rooters into a frenzy with the aforesaid rally. Houser took a clever pass from Laflin to start it, but Bob Doty, Central sub, pushed in a basket and it was still 31 to 40. Here Truitt contributed a basket and a free throw. Houser hit on a pivot shot, and Laflin pushed the ball in from outside the free throw circle to make it 38 to 40. Van Ryn made a free throw on Agan's foul, and Tom Shopoff and Van Ryn scored from underneath the basket. Then came Houser's last minute theft and basket.

Bedford Goes Down Fighting.

In the first afternoon game, Lebanon defeated Bedford's Stonecutters, 36 to 35, in a thrill packed second half wherein not more than four points ever separated the two. The score was tied four times in those final 16 minutes. Houser and Truitt were the heroes of the battle, the former making good on seven out of 11 free throw attempts. Truitt stole the ball and scored Lebanon's final basket.

This proved a vital one, for only a minute later John Brennan, Bedford's 6 foot 4 inch center, dropped in one from under the basket. In all, Brennan, a tireless commuter between the baskets all day long, made 21 points on nine field goals and three penalty tosses.

Lebanon led at the end of every quarter, 7 to 2, 14 to 12, and 26 to 24. Bedford's efforts to stop Houser and Mount were such that it made 18 of the 30 fouls in the game. The Cutters lost the services of three men via the four-personal route.

Central Whips Batesville.

Fort Wayne Central's place in the big game was arranged with a 33 to 24 triumph over the Bulldogs of little Batesville, which had been the surprise of the preliminaries. The Bulldogs, who had held their two tourney opponents last week to a total of 40 points, still acted as tho they had torn up the tactical book of basketball. They seemed to relish passing the ball in the area between the free throw circles more than driving in for shots.

The only one of them who didn't follow this quaint system was Charley Fritsch, who departed from the team plan so far that he wound up as the game's leading scorer with five baskets and three free throws. Head man for the winners was Bob Van Ryn with four field goals. Batesville held the quarter lead at 7 to 5, but Central came on for a 17 to 14 edge at the intermission, and never permitted the Bulldogs to come closer than six points in the second half.

WITH THE WHITE SOX—FROM ROOKIE TO OWNER

An umbrella is a handy gadget and three White Sox make the most of it. Left to right: Coach Mule Haas, Manager Jim Dykes, and Pitcher Edgar Smith.

McKechnie Lauds Frey, Miller Combination.

Bloomington, Ind., March 20 [Special].—The weather and Jordan field permitting, the Cincinnati Reds will play a squad game tomorrow afternoon, Manager Bill McKechnie said today.

Cincinnati's new keystone combination of Eddie Miller and Lonnie Frey, which McKechnie believes will be baseball's best this season, was in form in an infield practice conducted today in the Indiana university fieldhouse.

INTRASQUAD GAME POSTPONED.

Evansville, Ind., March 20 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers ended their first week in camp with an extensive batting and fielding drill today. Evidently Manager Steve O'Neill isn't overenthused about their progress, however, because he postponed for possibly 48 hours the first intrasquad game scheduled for tomorrow.

PITCHERS PLEASE SEWELL.

Cape Girardeau, Mo., March 20 (AP).—The St. Louis Browns pitchers progressed the most in the first week of training camp for they got a good daily drill no matter what the weather. And Manager Luke Sewell was well pleased with all 10.

Bob Muncrief, the right-hander who underwent an operation for removal of bone chips in his arm during the winter, bore down today for the first time and showed no ill effects. The workout was indoors.

INDIANS SEEK FIRST BASEMAN.

Lafayette, Ind., March 20 (AP).—Roy Cullenbine was regarded today as a possible contender for the Cleveland Indians' first base job. Altho he came to the club as an outfielder, Cullenbine recently has been bracketed with Catcher Otto Denning in Manager Lou Boudreau's discussions of the problem created by Les Fleming's decision to remain in war work.

At first, Denning appeared to be the choice for the first base spot, but now is expected to get some competition for the assignment.

SENATORS TRY KNUCKLERS.

College Park, Md., March 20 (AP).—Manager Ossie Bluege may have three knuckle ball flingers to call upon this season in addition to the Senators' maestro, Dutch Leonard.

GIANTS GET OUTSIDE.

Lakewood, N. J., March 20 (AP).—The New York Giants drilled out of doors for two hours today with Joe Orengo making some fancy stops at first base. Manager Mel Ott is using both Orengo, regularly a shortstop or second baseman, and Outfielder Babe Barna at the position. Johnny Mize, last year's first sacker, will be examined by his St. Louis draft board on March 24 and Ott wants his replacements, should Mize be called, to get all the experience possible.

BRAVES BUY MYERS.

Boston, Mass., March 20 (AP).—The Boston Braves tonight announced the purchase of Infielder Billy Myers, former shortstop for the Cincinnati Reds, from the Los Angeles Pacific Coast league club. It is likely that Myers, who spent six seasons in the National league, will be groomed to succeed Eddie Miller as the Braves' shortstop. Miller has been sold to Cincinnati.

EVANSTON AGAIN WINS RIFLE TITLE IN CULVER MEET

Culver, Ind., March 20 [Special].—Evanston Township High school won the Midwest Junior rifle championship here today for the second successive year by scoring 1,861 out of a possible 2,000. Culver Military academy's varsity rifle men chalked up 1,851 points to take second place in the annual matches in which nine midwestern teams participated.

Richard Cavenaugh, Evanston, took the individual four position championships with 385 points. A perfect score of 100 gave Cadet Matthew Blackwood of Culver the sitting position medal, while in the prone position Charles Booz, Evanston, and William Whiting, Culver, tied with 200. Summaries:

Teams' scores—Evanston, 1,861; Culver, first team, 1,851; Culver, second team, 1,794; Gary, Ind., High school, 1,768; Louisville, Ky., Male, 1,718; Indianapolis Arsenal Tech., 1,817; Joliet, Ill., High school, 1,689; Ashland, Ky., Sr. High school, 1,612; Owensboro, Ky., High school, 1,502.

GIRLS' SOFTBALL TOURNAMENT TO START ON MAY 13

The annual spring softball tournament sponsored by the Metropolitan Chicago Girls' Major Softball league will be held in Shewbridge field May 13-16, with all profits going to the Service Men's center. Eight teams will compete, including the Garden City Girls, Rockola Music Maids, Rheingolds, Tungsten Sparks, Elmhurst V-8s, Parichy Bloomer Girls, Ed Kolski's Girls, and one more team to be selected later.

The league schedule will start May 30 and continue until Sept. 1. Four parks will be used, Shewbridge field and Rand stadium on the south side, Parichy stadium at Harrison and Harlem, and Rockola stadium on the northwest side.

DODGERS FEELING SORRY FOR OTHER MAJOR LEAGUERS

Bear Mountain, N. Y., March 20 (AP).—The Brooklyn Dodgers are getting into shape so fast up here in the hills that they are beginning to feel sorry for some of the other major league clubs. Their daily drills in the West Point fieldhouse are conducted with a hustle and a holler that keeps everybody busy all the time.

"We're in great shape," said Manager Leo Durocher today. "Why I have had to limit our work to about two hours because the boys go at it so hard they would wear themselves out if I let 'em.

"That's what I like about this gang of mine. They give it all they've got. Take Whit Wyatt. He got himself in shape at Hot Springs, Ark., and do you know what he did today? He ran and walked 22 times around the inside of the fieldhouse. That's more than four miles."

Have Fun at Play, Too.

Besides going about their work with a gusto, the Dodgers have been having a lot of fun in their leisure time playing pool, cards, table tennis, and seeing the movies that are shown especially for them four nights a week in the inn.

Durocher, who was the somewhat celebrated champion card player of the club last year, has been devoting himself to the pool tables here and is the undisputed ruler.

Some questioning brought the information from Durocher that he used to play exhibition matches with Willie Hoppe, Ralph Greenleaf, and other stars. His highest run here has been 47.

Club's Hotel Isolated.

The inn where the club is staying is completely isolated. Two of the players, Alex Kampouris and Al Sherer, arrived at 4:30 a. m. the other morning on a milk train and in the darkness couldn't find the twisting road that leads from the railroad.

They started pushing their way thru underbrush and after battling up the mountain for what seemed an interminable time, were about to give up and build a fire. But they spotted a light in the distance and trudged eventually into the headquarters of the park police near the inn.

Innkeeper Entertains Players.

Because there is no place else for the players to go, the proprietor of the inn, John Martin, has been thinking up entertainment. At dinner one night players, coaches, and newspaper men all found themselves being annoyed by an impertinent waiter. It was a professional stunt, of course, but caused some tempestuous scenes in the dining room. Tonight there was an exhibition by two table tennis champions.

As a training camp it is different from anything baseball has even seen. But then the Dodgers have got to be daffy.

MILWAUKEEAN TO COACH BASEBALL AT OKLAHOMA

Norman, Okla., March 20 (AP).—Howard [Splash] Spangenberg, former Milwaukee, Wis., boys' club worker and semi-pro baseball player, has been named baseball coach of the University of Oklahoma for the 1943 season.

Dale Arbuckle, athletic director, said Spangenberg, now a shop instructor at the naval aviation technical training base here, would succeed Jack Baer, recently called to active duty as an ensign by the navy. Spangenberg attended Milwaukee Teachers college and Marquette university.

Baseball Out; Nebraska Plans Intramural Play

Lincoln, Neb., March 20 (AP).—The University of Nebraska has dropped baseball as a varsity sport this year because of difficulty in getting a representative schedule, transportation, and man power problems, Athletic Director Glen Presnell said today. A program of intramural baseball will be substituted under the direction of Ad Lewandowski, varsity coach. Previously Nebraska had dropped wrestling and swimming.

Two Stanley Cup Play-off Series to Open Tonight

New York, March 20 (AP).—Topping off a hockey season filled with unexpected performances by almost every club except the Detroit Redwings, the National Hockey league's post-season playoffs will get under way tomorrow with the Redwings rated as odds-on favorites to win the Stanley cup.

The Redwings have been in that position before. A year ago they won the first three games of the best-of-seven Stanley cup final series from the Toronto Maple Leafs, only to lose four in a row in one of the greatest form reversals big-league hockey ever has seen. Tomorrow they'll again oppose the Maple Leafs to start a first-round playoff between the teams that finished first and third during the regular season.

The other playoff series brings together the second-place Boston Bruins and the Montreal Canadiens, who edged out Chicago's Blackhawks for fourth place on the last night of the season. Winners of these two best-of-seven rounds will clash in a final series for the Stanley cup, emblem of world professional hockey supremacy.

Switch Sites Thursday.

The rivals will play tomorrow night and Tuesday at Detroit and Boston, then shift to Toronto and Montreal for Thursday and Saturday games. If more are necessary, they'll move again and alternate home-and-home for each game.

The almost unanimous choice of the Redwings as eventual winners stems not only from their record of 25 victories and 11 ties in 50 regular season games, but from the fact that they suffered fewer losses to the services than any other club.

While such clubs as the New York Rangers, last season's league champions who finished in the cellar this year, and Boston's Bruins saw their veteran squads virtually wrecked by military calls, Detroit suffered only a few minor losses. They finished the campaign with the league's best defensive record to earn the Vezina trophy for Goalie Johnny Mowers, and they scored 164 goals, a comparatively low total this season, but still better than three-a-game average.

Toronto Has Best Rookie.

Toronto also retained many of its veterans thruout the season and turned up the year's prize rookie in Gaye Stewart. But the Leafs suffered a crippling blow late in the season when their star center, Sylvanus Apps, was injured.

Off their late-season record, the Canadiens should have the edge over the Bruins, who also were hard hit by military calls and injuries. Altho they barely made the playoffs, the Canadiens won seven and tied four of their last 15 games while the Bruins recorded only two victories in eight games during the final month.

Red Dutton, acting president of the league, announced in Montreal today that the war time ban on overtime games had been lifted for the playoffs. The league restricted regular scheduled games to one overtime period at the start of the season and later eliminated all overtimes. The action was taken so that players would be able to make trains on which they had made reservations.

HEINIE WAGNER, FORMER RED SOX MANAGER, DIES

New Rochelle, N. Y., March 20 (AP).—Charles [Heinie] Wagner, former Boston Red Sox shortstop and manager of the club in 1930, died today at his home. Wagner, 61 years old, started his major league career with the New York Giants in 1902 but was returned to the minors, playing for Newark and Waterbury before he was sold to the New York American league club in 1907.

Heinie's next stop was the Boston Red Sox and he took over the shortstop position, which he held until 1918 except for 1914 when he was ill. He became coach for the Red Sox in 1927 and was named manager in 1930, succeeding Bill Carrigan. Wagner, however, was unable to lift the Sox out of last place and resigned at the end of the season. He was not related to Honus Wagner,

The 80 year old manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, recalling his first training trip with the Washington Senators in 1888, said today:

"We had 15 players that year and we bunked two in a lower berth and one in an upper to Charlotte, N. C. Then we changed trains and rode in a day coach to Jacksonville, Fla.

"We lived in a third class hotel during the training season, because the first and second class hotels wouldn't house "rowdy" ball players. In fact, we weren't, allowed to mingle with the other guests at our own hotel."

SALE OF PHILS TO COX SYNDICATE IS COMPLETED

Philadelphia, Pa., March 20 (AP).—Sale of the Philadelphia Phillies to William D. Cox and his syndicate was completed today, and 4,950 of the 5,000 shares of club stock were turned over to the new owners free of debt.

Cox then released the names of the five-man board of directors. They are: Stanley [Bucky] Harris, manager of the team; J. Marshall Briley, 38 years old, New York attorney, who is also the lawyer for the New York lumber company which Cox heads; John H. Potter, 54, Philadelphia, New York theatrical manager; L. Wister Randolph, 47, Philadelphia broker, and Cox.

No Outstanding Obligations.

Ford Frick, National league president, who turned over the stock to Cox, said: "There are now no obligations outstanding against the Phillies. Everything has been paid, including the back rent on Shibe park. The club is now under the control of Mr. Cox and his associates and all debts have been cleaned up."

The new board of directors immediately elected Cox president and named George A. Fletcher, 37 year old New York contractor, secretary treasurer. Cox said a vice president will be chosen later.

The 50 shares of stock not acquired today, Cox explained, are held by seven stockholders who declined to sell.

Some Withhold Names.

He said he would announce the names of his associates in the syndicate some time next week, but added that the names of some, at their own request, will never be known. However, he revealed that Potter has some money in the club and Briley and Harris have not.

lot of didoes for the photographers, such as Manager Dykes and Manager Jim Wilson of the Cubs posing with goats, the goats adorned with specially tailored Sox and Cub blankets. Coach Mule Haas also posed with a Mexican burro. The athletes also hiked quite a piece. Some estimated the distance at 15 miles. Others who didn't get so tired said the squad walked fully a mile.

Bob Dorr, superintendent of Wrigley field, who has been down here for weeks, directing work on the playing fields, continued morose and all but speechless today, tho the flood waters seemed to be receding a few inches. He said the drainage of the Cub field is such that it may be playable by the middle of next week. He is discouraged about the Sox field at West Baden. Manager Wilson intimated he'd probably consent to arrange his two drills a day program to make room for the Sox.

Whatever the plans, it may be that the Sox will go to Evansville for exhibition games with the Detroit Tigers next week-end without previously having looked upon a baseball diamond.

MIDWEST RIFLE MEET IS CALLED OFF BY MAROONS

The eighth annual midwest rifle championship meet, which had been scheduled for next week at the University of Chicago and would have been the nation's largest .22 caliber tournament, has been canceled, it was learned last night. A combination of factors, including the navy's use of the Midway fieldhouse as a training center, the ammunition shortage and transportation difficulties, led to the action, according to Russell Wiles Jr., Maroon rifle coach who has been in charge of arrangements for the tournament.

In its seven years of existence, the meet had grown to an affair in which more than 700 marksmen, including some of the nation's best, took part.

Last year the navy relinquished the fieldhouse for the time required for the three day meet, and officials said that the use of ammunition was justifiable on the grounds of the tournament's effect in promoting civilian marksmanship. This year, however, the transportation factor has become sufficiently serious, added to the other difficulties, to call off the matches, Wiles said.

Despite the cancellation of this meet, which has been the climax of rifle activities on the Midway, shooting has become one of the university's most popular sports. The largest single group of marksmen on the Midway is made up of men enrolled in the basic military training course of the university's institute of military studies. All the men who take the course are given elementary instruction—a total of more than 6,200 since the program was begun in October, 1940.

Rifle Club Wins League Title.

Rifle instruction also is given to the army weather cadets in training in the university's institute of meteorology, and as to more than 200 regular students. The program includes varsity, freshman, and high school teams, plus the Midway Rifle club, made up of students, alumni and members of any of the other programs. The rifle club this season won its third straight championship of the Southern Rifle league of Chicago.

The rifle range in the west stand at Stagg field, which was doubled in capacity in the fall of 1940, now is in use seven afternoons a week and every evening except Sunday.

CARDINAL FARM SYSTEM PAYING WAR DIVIDENDS

Promising Replacements Soften Losses.

Cairo, Ill., March 20 (AP).—Even more than in peace time, the St. Louis Cardinals' farm system is proving its value today at the champions' spring training camp where Manager Billy Southworth faces the problem of replacing his war losses.

Three World series heroes—Outfielders Enos Slaughter and Terry Moore and Pitcher Johnny Beazley—are in the service and Second Baseman Jimmy Brown has been called for his physical examination with possible induction in mid-April.

Yet, Cardinal fortunes have not yet been affected to the extent that similar military contributions have weakened the majority of the other major league teams.

Promising Replacements.

The reason is that the Cardinal farms, while virtually shut down themselves, have supplied the parent club with a group of promising replacements. It's perhaps premature to put the yardstick on rookies in advance of actual big time experience, but it's safe to predict, as Southworth did, that the Cardinals will have a very interesting team.

Here's the way they shape up, by departments:

Best rookie bet — Lou Klein, a rugged, wiry infielder who has been spoken of as a potential Rogers Hornsby because of his slugging possibilities.

Batted .367 for Columbus.

Klein batted .348 with Daytona Beach, Fla., in 1940 and an even stouter .367 with Columbus in 1941. He slumped to .249 last year after developing eye trouble, but the condition apparently has been corrected by a specialist's treatments.

Catchers—Probably best in the league with Walker Cooper, Ken O'Dea, Sam Narron, and one promising recruit, Jerry Burmeister, who batted .325 with New Orleans.

Outfield — Southworth's major worry, because both Stan Musial and Harry Walker are holdouts. Southworth has Coaker Triplett of last years' team; Debs Garms, former national league batting champion, coming back after a good year at Sacramento, and Frank Demaree, veteran signed as a free agent during the winter.

STIRNWEISS REPORTS TO YANKS.

Asbury Park, N. J., March 20 (AP).—George Stirnweiss arrived today—the first infielder to report at the New York Yankees' camp. He was too late for today's practice, but it did not matter, as it was only another brief gym session in the high school. Stirnweiss, who as a second baseman for the Newark Bears stole 63 bases last year, likely will be drilled at third next week by Manager McCarthy. Of the Yank battery men, Pitcher Ernie Bonham and Catchers Bill Dickey and Rollie Hemsley are still camp absentees.

ONLY 7 PLAYERS REPORT TO STAGG FOR SPRING DRILL

Stockton, Cal., March 20 (AP).—Amos Alonzo Stagg, 80 year old dean of coaches, began another spring football practice season—but it ended abruptly.

Only seven players turned out for the opening College of the Pacific workout so Stagg canceled spring practice. He believes, however, the college will be able to have a team next fall.

Albany Gets 3 Players from Harrisburg Club

Albany, N. Y., March 20 (AP).—Albany of the Eastern Baseball league acquired today three players from Harrisburg, Pa., of the Interstate league. They are Floyd Peters, 25 years old, third baseman; Harry L. Sweeney, 25, Oil City, Pa., first baseman, and Albert Treichel, 23, St. Louis, Mo., pitcher. Albany will begin training here April 12.

BREEZING ALONG

TOP FLIGHT is the only horse in the history of the American turf to win more than $200,000 as a 2 year old. . . . The brown mare owned by C. V. Whitney hit the jackpot to the tune of $219,000 in 1931. . . . Whirlaway will get back into competition during the spring meeting at Churchill Downs. . . . The king of the money winners has been training at Oaklawn Park. . . With Regards will make his first 1943 start soon at Bay Meadows. . . . The son of Jack High—Loose Foot has been burning up the track in workouts on the California oval. . . . Chic Shirley, 2 year old filly which has been showing her heels to some of the best juveniles at the Fair Grounds, was purchased for $75 at the Lexington sales ring.

John Pollard.

Bay Meadows Asks for 25 Day Extension to Meeting.

Wonder what the boys who like to have a little wager riding on the ponies are going to do for "action" when the Fair Grounds, Oaklawn Park, and Bay Meadows conclude their meetings? . . . If Bay Meadows fails to get an extension of its current meeting there will be no horse racing in the United States after March 27. . . . The three tracks are scheduled to close on that day. . . . Bay Meadows may "go" on March 30 and 31, and the track has asked for an extension of 25 days. . . . If the California track does not get the extension the ponies will be on vacation until the opening of the New York season at Jamaica on April 8.

Keeneland association has started cultivation of a victory garden on the race track property in Lexington, Ky. . . . The Keeneland meeting, you know, will be held at Churchill Downs starting April 10 and winding up April 23. . . . Five stake races, including the $10,000 Blue Grass Stakes, are on the program. . . . John [Red] Pollard, the jockey who was aboard Seabiscuit in most of his trips to the post, is employed in a shipyard at Providence, R. I. . . . Tropic Zone, 4 year old colt racing in claiming events at Bay Meadows, was bought by Louis B. Mayer, motion picture executive, for $13,000 and sold to the present owner for $200.

Occupation in Training for Summer Stake Events.

Occupation, the king of the 2 year old money winners last year, has gone into training for the stake and handicap events this summer. . . . The winner of five futurities—Washington Park, Arlington Park, Belmont Park, Pimlico, and Breeders—was fired for a popped osselet some time ago and has been wintering at the Crestwood farm in Lexington, Ky. . . . He was not nominated for the Kentucky Derby. . . . The net profits of the charity meeting at the Fair Grounds probably will reach $60,000 to $70,000. . . . Proceeds of the first week of the meeting were approximately $20,000. . . . The Fair Grounds Breeders and Racing association will distribute the profits to New Orleans, La., charities and national relief funds. . . . Jockey Sterling Young, now on vacation in Florida, will get back into action at the opening of the New York season.

Ben Whittaker, owner of Pop's Pick, one of the outstanding developments of the winter season, will proceed to Hot Springs, Ark., from New Orleans, La., to witness the running of the Arkansas Derby on March 27. . . . It's a lassie at the home of the jockey, Jack Richard. . . . A seven pound girl has been born to Mrs. Richard at Winchester, Mass. . . . Ace Hudkins, which won at Bay Meadows the other day, is owned by the former prize fighter of that name. . . . And what a fighter the old Nebraska Wildcat was! . . . Ask any old timer. . . . Jack Hodgins, trainer for the Dixiana stable, will ship his string of horses to Churchill Downs. . . . Hodgins now is campaigning at the Fair Grounds.

MINNESOTA LAKE REGION IN DANGER BY LEGISLATION

BY BOB BECKER.

The young men of Minnesota who have gone into service may have their post-war recreational future foreclosed by action of the legislature up there which is considering bills to block the development of the Superior national forest and the neighboring recreational area known as the Quetico.

That's the charge filed against the Minnesota legislature a few days ago by the Quetico-Superior council, a conservation organization associated with the Izaak Walton league.

The Quetico-Superior council, which has been fostering the expansion of the midwest's most beautiful wilderness area for many years and keeping an eye on any movements to injure it, says that the proposed action by Minnesota represents the greatest threat to the famous border lakes region in many years.

Shock to Sportsmen.

To the many thousands of midwest conservationists and outdoor fans it must come as something of a shock to learn that the Minnesota conservation department [above all organizations] actually is sponsoring the bills which would throw a monkey wrench into the plans for development of the combined Quetico-Superior area under the direction of the United States forestry service.

One Minnesota paper describes the Minnesota department of conservation's stand as a "dog-in-the-manger" policy. The state apparently is in no position to develop the areas along the border under controversy, but it insists on stopping all expansion and development of the area by somebody else.

The annual visitors to the Superior national forest are estimated at 260,000. The forest is known over the country for its superlative recreational attractions. We have paddled many a mile up there and fished many of the lovely lakes along the border. In our opinion it's one of the most valuable recreational assets to the Mississippi valley country to be found anywhere in the midwest. We have a hunch that once outdoor fans know of the threat to that magnificent country they'll bombard Minnesota with requests that will be written in pretty strong language.

Bill Limits Boundaries.

The Minnesota senate bill [650] which made its appearance recently specifically limits the Superior national forest to its "original" boundaries, and forbids any expansion of the forest except with the unanimous consent of the attorney general and the auditor!

The amazing thing about the bill is this: the original boundaries of the forest, as proclaimed by Theodore Roosevelt in 1909, include none of the Basswood lake area. Since 1909 the forest service has consolidated this area in public ownership, and dedicated it as a roadless area, much to the delight of conservationists and sportsmen. Thus the bill represents a definite step backwards in public ownership of recreational wild life resources.

The Izaak Walton League of America and the Quetico-Superior council are fighting Minnesota's amazing tactics which definitely are against fishermen and sportsmen's interests in this war to insure the future of the border lakes country. Apparently they'll need all the help they can get to win.

EXPECT 200 TO ENTER CENTRAL A. A. U. TRACK

A field of more than two hundred is expected to compete in the 45th annual Central A. A. U. senior indoor track meet in the University of Chicago fieldhouse, Saturday night at 7:30 o'clock. Altho the deadline for entries in the meet is not until tomorrow, several strong teams have indicated they will compete. Chicago and Northwestern, as well as the freshman team of the University of Illinois, will be the Big Ten representatives. Other teams will include Navy Pier, De Kalb Teachers, North Central, Loyola, Wright and Wilson junior colleges, and the Olde Tymers club. A number of unattached contestants also will be entered in the 11 event affair.

S. M. U. Eleven Postpones Pitt and Temple Games

Dallas, Tex., March 20 (AP).—Coach James H. Stewart today reported postponement of two Southern Methodist intersectional football games scheduled for next fall. They are the games with Pittsburgh Oct. 23 in Dallas and with Temple Oct. 8 in Philadelphia.

SWOPE PREDICTS RACE BOOM WHEN TRACKS REOPEN

Expects 1943 to Be Good Year Generally.

New York, March 20 (AP).—Herbert Bayard Swope is a fellow who finds it tough in these busy times to get along on 24 hours a day.

All you need is a quick run-down on the jobs he's handling, and you see that the one armed paperhanger was strictly on a vacation compared to the dynamic, dapper, one time newspaper editor.

Just to give you a rough idea, there are such varied posts as consultant to Secretary of War Stimson; chairman of the state racing commission in New York, where racing was a $150,000,000 business last year; head of the Turf Committee of America, which collected $3,000,000 for war relief from the sport of the two buck bettors in 1942; member of the Columbia Broadcasting system's executive committee, and director of the Overseas News agency.

The result is, Herb has a lot of trouble crowding in things like eating and sleeping and playing, and you even wonder a bit how he manages to continue as one of the best dressed men in America. This is not a title you get by bouncing in and grabbing the first creation off a rack in an emporium of ready mades.

"But it's all fun," he said today as he coasted for a luncheon hour to give a sports writing friend a chance to catch up with him. "The hard part of it at first was discovering that I had to work wherever I was at the moment. I realized this suddenly one morning when I found myself dictating letters from my bathtub."

The way he maps his schedule these war weeks is to spend five days in Washington, where he consults on various policies of the war department as related to the public, and two in New York. These last two just now are devoted largely to oiling up the machinery for the coming New York racing season, which opens early next month and which Swope confidently believes will be just as artistic and financial a success as last year, when the state received an all-time record $10,000,000 in revenue from the sport.

"What's more," he went on, "I believe you're going to see racing enjoy a tremendous boom thruout the country after the war, when the tracks, which may be forced to close this year in the turf's policy of coöperating with the war effort, will reopen. Gambling is a natural instinct in most people. Records show even George Washington bet so much as $500 on a horse. And racing harnesses that instinct to revenue, so that government benefits from it.

Expects Good 1943 Business.

"As for this year, the turf will operate thruout the country up to about 70 per cent of its 1942 program. We've already lost Florida and some tracks in other states undoubtedly will have to close. There will naturally be some falling off financially from last year in certain states, because fewer people are going to be able to get to the tracks. However, it will be a good year generally, and I think New York's financial totals of last year will be repeated. And the turf can hold up its head on its complete coöperation with the war."

Swope prides himself on having the foresight to point out just what racing would have to do in this war year to go along. Long before the rubber powers-that-be pointed a finger at the turf's transportation problems, Swope predicted that automobile transportation to tracks would have to cease and suggested that horse drawn vehicles be substituted.

"And if it ever comes to the point," he said at that time, "where racing gets in the way in this respect, racing will have to shut down."

To Close Parking Lots.

Naturally, race track operators didn't stand up and cheer him about this bit of advice, but his forecast has become a reality. Only those tracks with regular transportation facilities will operate this year.

"Here in New York," he disclosed, "parking lots at all tracks will be shut down. I wish we had some means of controling the parking of cars adjacent to tracks, but unfortunately we do not."

"Altho New York's four metropolitan tracks—Belmont, Aqueduct, Jamaica, and Empire City—are served by regular facilities, Saratoga, upstate, has had to shift its meeting. The result is, the traditional "August at the spa" this year probably will be split up between Belmont and Aqueduct, with each housing half of the regular 30 day Saratoga meeting.

Not a Scandalous Word.

"There hasn't been one single word of scandal, altho we've handled millions annually," he points out. "Racing has been at its cleanest here."

Swope has been prominently mentioned as a national coördinator of all sports during the war, an office that has been talked of for months.

"They asked me about it in Washington some months ago," he explained, "but I feel I'm too old and too busy, so I turned it down."

That was the point where the man bit the dog—Swope admitting he's too busy to take over another job.

Winner of RedCrossBasket Game to Be Given Trophy

New York, March 20 (AP).—Walter A. Blankfort, a nonathlete in his undergraduate days at New York university, has donated a trophy which will go to the winner of the Red Cross basketball game between the national collegiate A. A. and the national invitational tourney champions at Madison Square Garden April 1.

BRITISH GOLFERS CARRY ON DESPITE HAZARDS OF WAR

Sheep Graze on Fairways; Balls Are Rationed.

LONDON, March 20 [Correspondence of the Associated Press].—Golf balls are rationed and sheep graze on the fairways, but the ancient and honorable game still is a popular sport in war time Britain. Strictly a week-end sport now, golf is the average man's game more than it ever was before the war and a source of vital recreation for both American and British soldiers.

Caddies are seldom if ever available and the fairways are generally rougher than the rough was when groundskeepers were on hand to keep the courses in shape. And the present rough can't be described as anything less than treacherous.

Two New Balls per Game.

Golfers may buy two new balls each time they play a game, but they must keep them away from the rough. Once a ball lodges in the wild undergrowth the chances of finding it are slim.

Despite those handicaps, however, men and women flock to the courses for relaxation from jobs in war factories and offices. Weather conditions have permitted the British to play a lot of winter golf.

Course operators purposely allow sheep and sometimes other livestock to graze on the fairways to keep the grass trimmed. The animals are penned up on week-ends. Greens are guarded by screens to protect the grass on putting surface.

Golfers Have to Walk.

With pleasure motoring banned, golfers pack their clubs on their backs and take a train as close as they can get to a golf course. They walk the rest of the way.

Man power shortages not only have stripped golf clubs of groundskeepers but have forced managers to discontinue restaurant and other luxury facilities. The 19th hole—or bar—still is a popular spot.

British authorities encourage the average worker to play the game as a beneficial form of recreation. It also is one of the requisite exercises usually prescribed for convalescing soldiers.

Henry Cotton, who won the British Open championship in 1934, still is one of Britain's outstanding golfers and has been staging a regular series of matches thruout the country.

Many Veterans Active.

Other veterans still active include Alfred Padghan, Archie Compston, Percy Arliss, Abe Mitchell, George Duncan, Jack Burton, and Charles Whitcombe. These man are looking forward to the war's end when the Ryder cup series with the United States will be resumed.

Cotton has suggested to Fred Corcoran of Boston, tournament manager for the Professional Golf association who now is with the Red Cross in Great Britain, that the two teams selected for the postponed 1939 series play when the competition is revived. The United States holds a 4 to 2 edge in the series.

N. B. A. Would Match Angott and Beau Jack

New York, March 20 (AP).—In the wake of Sammy Angott's startling comeback to snap Willie Pep's all-time record winning streak at 62 straight, the National Boxing association today called for a bout between Sammy and Beau Jack to end the lightweight championship muddle.

The possibility of such a bout coming off immediately was somewhat remote, however, since Promoter Mike Jacobs pointed out that Jack already is signed to defend his half of the lightweight crown—the New York half—against Bob Montgomery of Philadelphia in Madison Square Garden May 21.

Jacobs Leaves Loophole.

But Promoter Jacobs left one loophole thru which the lightweight merry-go-round might spin by saying that the only way a Beau Jack-Angott match could be arranged would be for the winner of such a fight to agree to meet Montgomery within 60 or 90 days, or else the winner of the Jack-Montgomery match could agree to meet Angott in the same period.

Just how it comes about doesn't matter much to President Abe Greene and the rest of the N. B. A., just so long as it happens somehow—and quick.

This is a stand fans also were taking today after the way Sammy hit the comeback trail last night by outpointing the 1 to 3 favorite.

$6,383 for Service Fund.

Boxing's service athletic equipment fund is $6,383.37 richer as the result of last night's fight. The fund is to furnish ring equipment to men in the armed services.

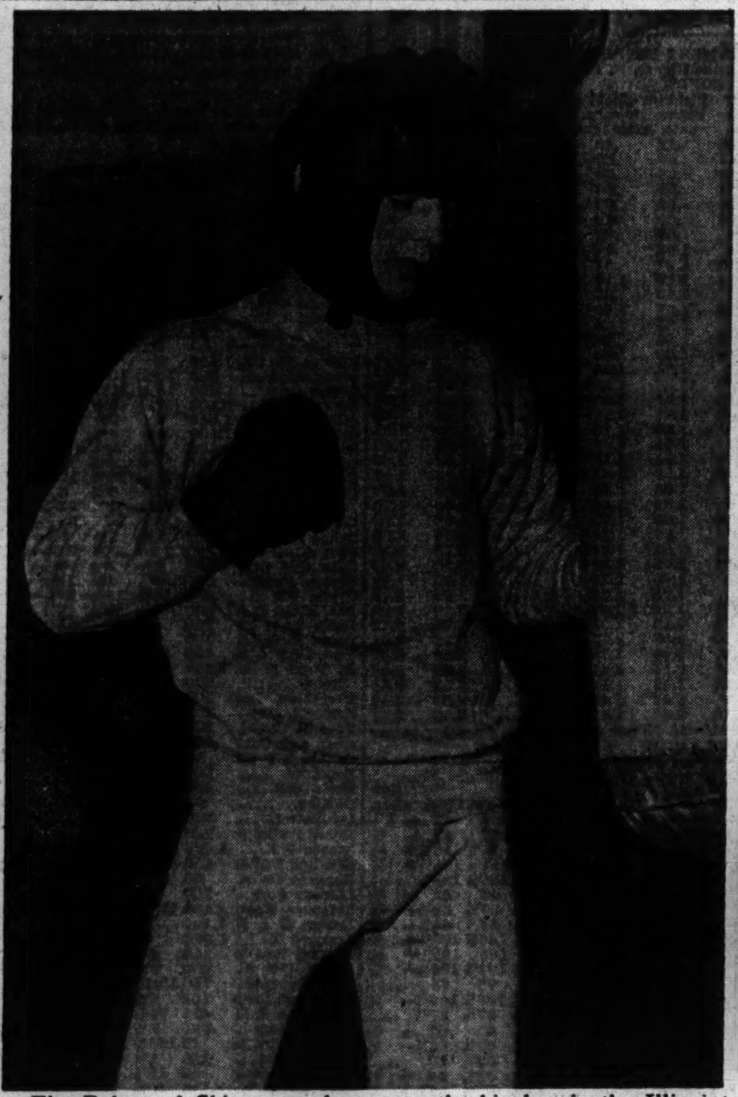
TIGERS SCHEDULE 4 GAMES WITH SERVICE TEAMS

Detroit, Mich., March 20 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers announced today exhibition games to be played at four service camps and said others would be added on off days from the American league schedule. The Tigers have 30 idle days, but many will be occupied by travel.

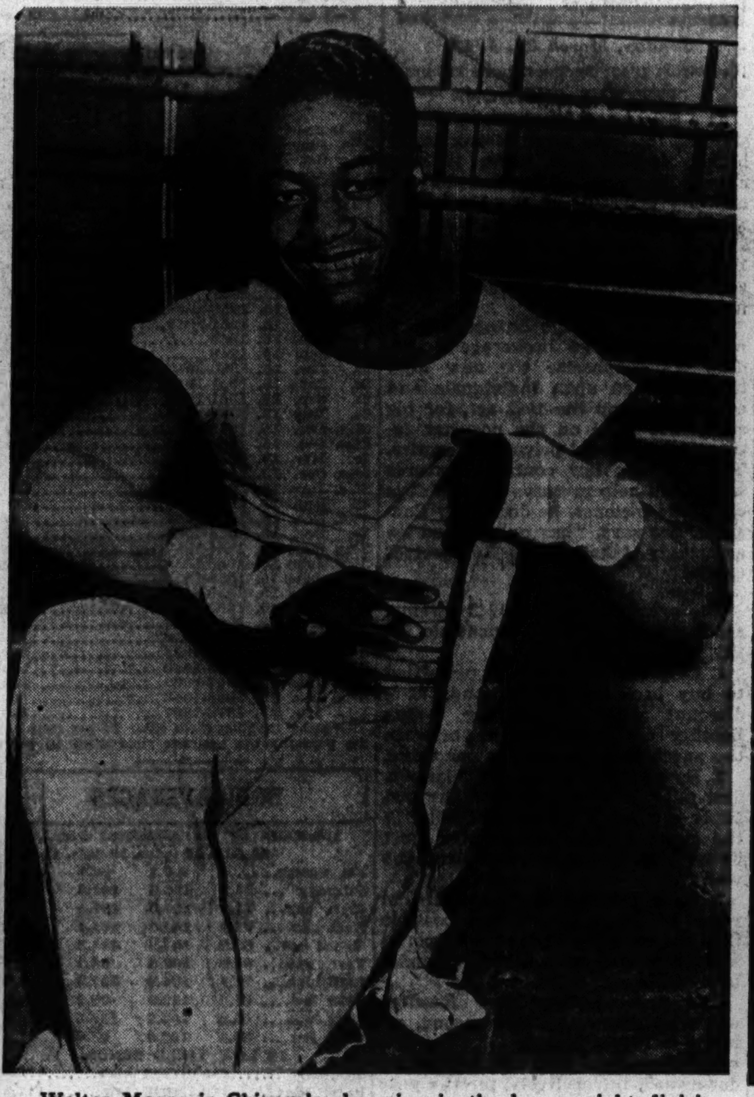
The Tigers will play June 28 at Jefferson barracks, Missouri; July 14 at Camp Grant, Illinois; July 16 at Great Lakes, Illinois and July 20 at Curtis Bay, Maryland.

Other trips tentatively scheduled are to Fort Monmouth, N. J., and Dayton, O., in addition, the Tigers and Chicago Cubs will meet in an exhibition game April 13 at George field, Indiana.

SETTING UP DEFENSES FOR BATTLE WITH NEW YORK GLOVERS



Tim Dalton of Chicago works out on the big bag in the Illinois Athletic club gymnasium as Chicago's Golden Gloves champions and candidates for alternate berths prepare for the invasion of the New York squad which will be met in the Stadium on the night of March 31. Dalton is seeking selection as 135 pound alternate.



Walter Moore is Chicago's champion in the heavyweight division. Here he's taping his hands preparatory to a workout in the I. A. C. gymnasium, where the Chicago squad is being trained for the battle with New York. Moore is rated a clever boxer who owns a knockout punch.

NORTH AND SOUTH TO OPEN TUESDAY AT PINEHURST

Pinehurst, the beautiful village in the sand hills of North Carolina, which has been one of the world's golfing capitals for nearly half a century, refuses to be stymied by the war. Beginning Tuesday, and continuing thru Wednesday and Thursday, Pinehurst will be the scene of the 41st annual North and South Open tournament, an event which hasn't been interrupted since its inception in 1903.

But for all that, this will be the only tourney of a spring campaign which used to abound in competitions at such nearby points as Asheville and Greensboro, N. C., and Augusta, Ga., and it will be a true war-time contest. The prize money of $2,000 will be distributed entirely in war bonds.

For Golfers Over 38

To further stress the war motif of the 1943 North and South, Richard S. Tufts and Donald J. Ross, Pinehurst executives, have ruled that only golfers over 38 years of age or those in the services will be eligible to compete. Pinehurst is located in an active military zone. Fort Bragg is only a few miles distant. Knollwood field, headquarters of the air force technical training command, is a half hour's walk from the Pinehurst Country club, and Hoffman, N. C., where another large military unit soon will be stationed, is 10 miles from the golf course.

The Open tourney is the first of three which Pinehurst plans to hold. The North and South women's championship is scheduled for decision from March 30 thru April 2, and the North and South amateur, 43rd of its kind, will begin April 13 and end April 17.

The 1942 Open provided the competing professionals opportunity to demonstrate what a high standard of play American golf had attained when war came. That title was won by Ben Hogan, the little Texan who is not expected to defend his crown, since he is awaiting induction into the army. Sam Snead, the runnerup, probably also will be among the missing, since he is in the navy, stationed in San Diego, Cal.

Hogan's Score a Record

That performance of Hogan's in winning last March was so brilliant that it may be years before its like ever is seen again on the No. 2 championship course at Pinehurst. In his victory march, Ben shot rounds of 67-68-67-69-271, breaking the previous winning record of 276, shot by Paul Runyan in 1935. Hogan arrived at the golfing village after years of steady tournament competition. The opportunity for such preparation is lost now for the duration.

The military bloc in the field this week at Pinehurst will depend largely upon the number of players now in uniform who are stationed in the vicinity of the village and who can obtain leaves to compete in the event.

But the list of old timers who will be eligible by reason of being over 38 is a handsome one, including as it does such veterans as Walter Hagen, Gene Sarazen, Jim Barnes, Craig Wood, Joe Kirkwood, Tommy Armour, Bobby Cruickshank, Willie MacFarlane, Bob MacDonald, Ed Dudley, Harry Cooper, Al Espinosa, Billy Burke, Fred McLeod, and Jock Hutchison.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 20 (AP).—An all-time record mutuels handle for Oaklawn Park was established today when a paid crowd of 5,239 bet $241,084 on the eight races. The largest previous handle was $237,758 which was wagered on the corresponding Saturday of the 1942 season. Total mutuels handle this season is $3,965,901 compared to $3,703,421 for the same period last year when a new betting record was set for Oaklawn.

JOYCE, GOMEZ TO MEET IN RETURN BuUT TOMORROW

Jimmy Joyce, 1940 Chicagoland Golden Gloves bantamweight finalist, who was defeated by Alvin Gomez in Marigold Gardens five months ago, will be given a chance for revenge when he meets Gomez in a return bout of 10 rounds in the same arena tomorrow.

Since Joyce has displayed considerable improvement in recent weeks, he probably will square accounts in the impending rematch. Jimmy has not been defeated in his last six starts. He scored five victories, his victims being Bill Parsons, Eddie Scott, Jackie Nichols, and Al Reasoner [twice].

One Draw with Reasoner.

In the other appearance, Joyce held Reasoner on even terms in a six round fight, but this was prior to the first of the two triumphs Jim registered over Reasoner.

Gomez also holds a 12 round verdict over Reasoner, the achievement being accomplished on Feb. 8. Alvin then suffered an upset at the hands of Robert Simmons of Indianapolis on March 8.

Nichols will return to action in a five round semi-windup tomorrow against Fred Dawson, former Catholic Youth organization champion. Jackie held Dawson to a four round draw in an earlier meeting, the event being the only one Fred has been unable to win since turning professional last Feb. 1. Dawson has defeated Bill Jordan and stopped Berlin Hadnott and Herman Mills.

Tom Campagna a Success.

Tom Campagna, formerly of the Catholic Youth organization, who was appointed boxing coach at the University of Maryland by Clark Shaughnessy shortly before the athletic director resigned to take a similar post at Pittsburgh, has finished his first season at the eastern university in possession of the best dual meet record scored by the school's boxers in the last 11 years. Maryland won seven of eight matches, victims including the West Point cadets. It was the first time the Army fighters have absorbed a beating in three years of competition.

San Francisco Club Trades Bejma for Steinbacker

San Francisco, Cal., March 20 (AP).—The San Francisco Baseball club reported today Ollie Bejma, second baseman, had been traded to Buffalo of the International league for Henry Steinbacker, outfielder, in an even exchange. Bejma, who lives in South Bend, Ind., did not want to return to the Pacific Coast league and Steinbacker, a Sacramento resident, was reluctant to play in the east.

Bradley makes no secret of the fact that Cooper is going to get a lot more attention than Floyd because the eastern coach is firmly convinced that Graves is the best western featherweight. He'd like to pit Floyd against Graves because he's sure either of his featherweights can beat Tony Janiro of Cleveland and he admits that except for the rule forcing champions to battle champions the card in the Stadium on March 31 would read Cooper vs. Janiro and Floyd vs. Graves.

"If the program could be made to read that way," he said, "the scoreboard would show two points for New York after the featherweight contests. As it is it appears to me to be a case of one fairly easy victory and one toss-up."

One of the New York champions, Eddie Lebreque, the light-heavyweight, probably will be unable to make the team. He's in the army at Indiantown Gap, Pa., and was summoned home shortly after he won his title, because of the death of his brother. It is unlikely his superiors will give him additional leave for the trip to Chicago.

GOOD ENTRY LIST IS IN PROSPECT FOR TEXAS MEET

Austin, Tex., March 20 (AP).—The University of Texas' 16th annual relays shape up as one of the best in the event's history.

Entries already in for the races on April 3 include 18 colleges and universities and seven service teams.

The service teams will compete in the university, college or junior college divisions. Out of state entries include:

JIM BLAIR'S .360 LEADS ROOKIES IN MINOR LEAGUES

Durham, N. C., March 20 (AP).—Jim Blair, first baseman with Petersburg of the Virginia league last season, was the leading rookie batter of the 1942 minor leagues, according to an announcement today by the National Association.

deal with Graves' southpaw tactics. Bradley remarked that if he was able to find a hard punching feather weight with a good left in the New York tournament, he'd have a boy who could beat Janiro.

Bradley's wishes have been fulfilled so far as finding a likely boy. The easterners are hailing Floyd as the best amateur fighter since Ray Robinson was winning Golden Gloves titles. Now it's up to the New Yorkers to show whether their boy is good enough to beat Janiro. It's never been done before. In 27 fights, the Youngstown boy has come out on top every time.

Might Mean Team's Victory.

If Janiro, favorite of the Chicago team, can whip Floyd, most brilliant of New York's squad, this would have a tremendous effect on the spirit and morale of Tony's teammates. It might be enough to sway the entire outcome. Chicago's co-coaches—Fred Caserio and Issy Klein—are going to make sure that Janiro's ready for anything.

With the approach of the matches which will bring the 1943 Golden Gloves campaign to a conclusion, the demand for tickets is rising. Good seats still remain on sale, however, in the Tribune Public Service offices, 1 South Dearborn street, and Tribune tower lobby. Prices are $3.30, $2.20, $1.65, and $1.10.

Three Days of Fighting Starts Thursday.

Madison, Wis., March 20 [Special].—At least 40 of the leading college and university boxers of the United States, who aspire to the eight national crowns of the collegiate boxing world, will come to Madison this week to participate in the ninth annual National Collegiate Athletic association's boxing tournament.

Preliminaries of the tournament will open in the Wisconsin fieldhouse Thursday night, Guy Sundt, assistant athletic director at the university and tournament chairman, announced today. The semi-finals will be held Friday night, with the finals on Saturday.

Field Is Larger.

Sundt said the number of boxers competing is less than in the 1939 tourney at Madison, but larger than the number usually entered in N. C. A. A. tournaments when held at other schools. He also said that the quality of those who will be fighting for the national college ring crowns this year appears to be higher, due to the fact that coaches, in these war times, are in most cases sending only their best boxers.

Several schools which indicated that they were entering boxers at several weights are still to be heard from, Sundt revealed.

12 Colleges Represented.

The 40 boxers so far entered in the tournament will represent 12 different colleges and universities and one United States army flying school. Among them are champions of their own schools or conferences. Only school to enter eight fighters, one in each weight class, is Wisconsin, with other schools entering from one to six boxers. Following are the entries to date by weights:

HEAVYWEIGHT—Frank Hawrylak, Penn State; Lt. Jack Kemper, Kirtland field; James McMillen, Purdue; Verdayne John, Wisconsin.

Golf, Within Limits, Is O.K. with McNutt

Philadelphia, Pa., March 20 (AP).—Paul V. McNutt, chairman of the war man power commission, has given the go ahead signal for war time golf. Ed Dudley, president of the Professional Golfers' association, disclosed today. It was emphasized, however, that the war comes first and that persons should only play in their spare time and provided they do not abuse transportation privileges.

Dudley said golf has been seriously handicapped in the last year by an adverse psychological influence in the minds of the people due to the fact that many who wanted to play and get beneficial exercises were afraid they would appear unpatriotic.

"Mr. McNutt," Dudley said in a statement, "was surprised to learn that this psychology prevailed. . . . He pointed to the emphasis which the services place upon physical fitness thru recreation and exercise. While certainly professional sports never can expect any kind of favored treatment either in draft deferment or in competition with essential or war time industries, recreational sport as such, he felt, would be a good thing.

". . . If country clubs can provide horsedrawn vehicles to get their players to the courses or if the people can reach them by public conveyances, there is no reason why they should not play in their spare time. Bear in mind that the war comes first, but don't be afraid to get out and exercise on the golf courses at the right time. . . . Don't feel that it 's unpatriotic to play golf."

SEMI-FINALS OF B. B. Y. O. MEET TO BE PLAYED TODAY

Semi-final games in the annual B'nai B'rith Youth organization basketball tournament will be played this morning and afternoon at Columbus park.

MOTORS—TRAFFIC—HIGHWAYS

PROVE TUBELESS TIRE PRACTICAL FOR USE BY ARMY

BY HAL FOUST.

Washington, D. C., March 20.—An old proposal to remove inner tubes from tires in service now is relegated with President Roosevelt's suggestion to remove rubber floor insulators from automobiles. Both are now classed as fumbles in the government's muddled rubber planning.

Conclusive if not concluding evidence re the inner tube question came this week in a letter from James J. Newman, vice president of B. F. Goodrich company. His company has designed a tubeless tire for military service. He emphatically differentiates between this new tire, built for operation without a tube, and an ordinary tire which would suffer from operation without a tube.

Designed for Heavy Duty.

"The new military tire," he wrote, "has proved practical because it is designed and developed for heavy duty service, requiring extraordinary thickness and stiffness in the sidewall to make the tire both bullet-sealing and strong enough not to go flat even if torn by shell fragments.

"To achieve this result, these tires have an extra thick inner surfacing of rubber which prevents the air from seeping thru the sidewalls. Details are not made public for military reasons.

"Tires built to such specifications are impractical for passenger car use, because the extra rubber needed to prevent air seepage would actually be greater than that required to build a tube. Nevertheless, this B. F. Goodrich development holds great promise for future use on commercial vehicles—and post-war development work may find a way to adapt the same principle to passenger cars.

"Ordinary tires run without their tubes are another matter. While it is true that present day tires can be sealed to the rim of the wheel, air pressure within the tire eventually, and sometimes quickly, forces air into the sidewall and cord structure of the tire causing air bubbles, ply separation and blowouts. The point is that the inner surface of an ordinary passenger car tire does not have enough rubber coating to prevent this seepage. The plan would be practical if a suitable liner could be developed of a nonstrategic material.

Would Waste Tons of Rubber.

"The findings of tire men is that the use of present day passenger car tires without tubes would shorten the life of these tires now on the road—wasting thousands of tons of precious rubber and millions of potential tire miles so essential to the war. If tubes were taken off cars now on the road they would not help today's rubber crisis for these tubes could be used only for reclaim and our present reclaiming industry now has a scrap stock pile sufficient for nearly two years."

Similar objections were found to the proposal, sponsored by the President and ardently supported by Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes last year, to donate automobile floor mats to the junk piles. The mats in automobiles were protection for the passengers against cold, heat, and engine fumes. In the junk yards, they were merely made a part of overflowing stock piles of scrap.

They'll Soon Be Repairmen

Apparently it won't be long before motorists will be greeted by women "repairmen" when they go into their service stations for car checkups and repairs. The scene is in the service station of the Chrysler Pittsburgh company, where Dorothea Wagner is getting some pointers from Steve Ference.

Synthetic Rubber Brings Out Con Men in Era of Gold Brick

BY HAL FOUST.

Washington, D. C., March 20.—The search for satisfactory substitutes for rubber, still continuing, has been an exciting subject for more than a century. Technical literature reports the efforts of chemists to analyze rubber as early as 1833. As a clew to artificial production, science sought to understand nature's method—and it's still somewhat of a mystery.

In 1856, a Frenchman, Chevalier De Claussen, described the fruit of an African tree, hancornia, as containing rubber which disappeared or was converted to sugar a few days after it was picked. It was generations later before this process was reversed—the production of synthetic rubber from alcohol made from fermented sugar.

In 1860, Greville Williams, an English chemist, broke down rubber and obtained isoprene, a main ingredient in today's most successful synthetic. In experiments between 1882 and '84 another Englishman, William Tilden [no tennis player], obtained isoprene from a source other than natural rubber, from turpentine. Some isoprene is being made today from turpentine, altho most of it is obtained from petroleum and from alcohol.

Enter the Con Man.

In the first decade of the twentieth century, confidence men as well as scientists were reporting synthetic rubber discoveries, some true and some false. Most of the reports were fit companions for the gold bricks also being sold to the gullible in that era.

In 1906 there was a panic in the speculative rubber stocks on the London market as news spread that a synthetic could be made from potatoes and from grains. There were protests that the discovery would threaten the island's food supply—just as there is concern today that the distillation of grains for alcohol, mainly for synthetic rubber and explosives, is a serious drain on America's food reserves.

In 1909, chemists for Bayer, a branch of I. G. Farbenindustrie, extracted the makings of a rubber substitute from coal tar. A year or two later the kaiser was presented a set of synthetic tires. In 1912 in New York, before a meeting of the International Congress of Applied Chemistry, Dr. Carl Duisberg read a paper in German, describing production methods, and displayed a set of synthetic tires.

Substitute Inferior.

The artificial substitute was inferior to natural rubber, as it still is as a tire material, and the commercial development was slow. Germany, in August of 1914, invaded Belgium without rubber supplies adequate for the long war which followed. England invoked an embargo on rubber, giving American manufacturers supplies only on their pledge not to export. Germany soon was desperate. It was the first war with a heavy demand for rubber, altho not as great as are the demands of the second World war.

The German chemical industries set to work. Food was too scarce to use it to make rubber. A process was developed using coal, limestone and salt. Natural rubber was smuggled into the country. The submarine Deutchland made two trips to America, each time returning with 500 tons of rubber. By the end of the war, synthetic production in Germany had reached a rate of 150 tons a month.

In the '20s, when the British-Dutch international monopoly boosted the price of natural rubber from 11½ cents a pound in 1921 to $1.21 a pound in 1925, the research in synthetics was stimulated, especially in Germany, Russia and the United States. In 1925, the Rev. Julius Arthur Nieuwland of the University of Notre Dame delivered a lecture in which he told of his laboratory production of rubbery substances in the course of his work with acetylene. A du Pont chemist was in the audience. Thereafter a staff of 28 du Pont chemists went to work under the priest's supervision. They produced neoprene, a synthetic with high resistance to oil and certain acids, commercially successful as a specialty rubber, but too expensive to compete with natural. Dow Chemical company also produced a specialty rubber.

Nazis Solve Problem.

In 1934, Hitler announced that Nazi industry had whipped the rubber problem with a synthetic costing only 60 to 80 per cent more than the natural controlled by England and the Netherlands. About the same time, the Reds announced the same success for the soviet, using grain alcohol as a base material.

In the United States, the Standard Oil of New Jersey entered into a joint research enterprise with the German I. G. Farben. The Nazis developed Buna S, the synthetic that supports Hitler's armies today and the mainstay synthetic in the American government's tardy plant construction program. Standard developed butyl, a synthetic described in the Baruch report to President Roosevelt as "May be developed, but not yet satisfactory."

This relationship between Standard and I. G. is described in a recent book, "Germany's Master Plan" [Duell, Sloan & Pearce], written by Joseph Borkin of the department of justice anti-trust division and Charles A. Welch of the office of price administration.

Reciprocal Arrangement.

Under the reciprocal arrangement, according to this book, Standard gave the Germans full knowledge of butyl, but I. G. gave Standard the barest patent specifications, withholding information vital to commercial development of Buna S. Furthermore, it is charged that Standard, protecting exclusive commercial rights, successfully blocked efforts of four American rubber manufacturers to license processes developed under this alleged international cartel.

"How perfectly Standard's desire to look out for its own commercial future coincided with axis plans!" the authors declare.

Fifteen months after Pearl Harbor, the production of synthetic rubber still is just a trickle and Rubber Director William M. Jeffers estimates that it will be next December, two years after the Japanese attack, before production equals consumption.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Two of the most serious wartime problems facing the automobile industry—man power and rationing—will be discussed at a meeting Tuesday noon in the grand ballroom of the Drake hotel. It will be held under the joint auspices of the Chicago Automobile Trade association and the Illinois Automotive Trade association.

The session is expected to draw a large crowd of passenger automobile and truck dealers whose business has been sharply curtailed by war activities.

Ben T. Wright, president of the Chicago trade group, announced that speakers will include Dean William H. Spencer, regional director of the war man power commission; Lt. Col. George A. Irvin, regional field officer of the selective service commission, and Samuel B. Shapiro, chief of the research and quota section, automobile rationing branch, office of price administration. Shapiro formerly was general manager of the Chicago association.

The National Automobile Dealers' association is urging the 35,000 automobile dealers in the country to take aggressive steps to encourage more share-the-rides.

"Local transportation in practically every part of the country is strained to the breaking point and something must be done to keep it intact," the association said. "A tremendous load would be taken off public transportation if drivers of private cars would adopt a more liberal attitude in sharing rides. It is realized, of course, that millions of car owners are most liberal in the matter now.

"A survey recently completed by the [illegible]A showed at the end of [illegible] there were approximately 28,500,000 passenger cars registered in the United States. Many millions of this number are in daily use and facilities therefore exist for greatly relieving the load on buses and street cars."

Joseph W. Frazer, president of Willys-Overland Motors, Inc., discloses that the Toledo auto concern is producing an amphibian Jeep trailer—a vehicle designed to carry a quarter ton load on both land and sea. He said the trailer not only presents as low a battlefield silhouette as the Jeep to which it will be coupled but, when loaded, offers a vertical target of only 6 inches in the water.

Frazer predicts that the trailer will greatly enhance the versatility of the Jeep by increasing its carrying power both on long range reconnaisance and in actual combat service.

TREES.

Elgin, Ill., March 18.—The writer is a traveling salesman with 50 years' experience, 20 of which he has driven the year around over northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin roads under every conceivable condition. We would like to know who is responsible for the insane program of planting trees along highways, violating the first principle of highway construction, namely—safety.

Wherever trees are adjacent to a highway, ice forms in winter and remains long after it has been dissipated on the open roads.

Recently we had a most difficult drive from Princeton to Morris, Ill., on route 6. Freezing rain on the open road was bad, but old snow ice formed by trees and wet with rain was worse. We saw four cars ditched, every one due to snow ice caused by adjacent trees.

Let us use the same gangs now planting trees in uprooting every possible tree on the public right of way, or else change our slogan to "beauty first."

Every tree may some day cost a life.

JITNEY CABS.

Chicago, March 18.—I get so burnt up every morning driving to work on South Park way with those darn jitney cabs. They cut in front of other cars—stop on a dime to take on or let off passengers. They are a menace. Every one on the street has bashed in fenders, indicative of how they drive.

IS HIS CARD SAFE?

Chicago, March 12.—Can you tell me if an automobile owner can be assured he will not have his gas ration card, whether A or B, taken away from him after he purchases his license plates?

Are we protected from this? Of course I mean in the very near future, not November or December.

I am not the only one who would like to know this.

RECAP YOUR TIRES BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE, OWI URGES

Washington, D. C., March 20 [Special].—The office of war information this afternoon renewed a plea to motorists to have their tires recapped before they are so badly worn that they won't support a new tread.

Rubber Director William M. Jeffers recently removed a requirement for a ration order for a recap. He wants car owners to take advantage of recap opportunities because a recap uses only a third as much rubber as a war model tire also available to the general public. Both are made of reclaim and neither is good for fast driving. The ceiling price for recapping a 6.00x16 tire is $6.50.

THE TAX CUSHION.

At a time when nearly every one is stinging from the pinch of drastically higher income tax rates, it may appear incongruous to find in the monthly magazine of the New York Stock exchange an article giving unstinting praise to the revenue act of 1942 as "probably the most intelligently drawn, most farsighted revenue act ever written."

The author, George Barnes, a partner in a Chicago brokerage house, does not emphasize the new high rates imposed upon individuals and corporations by the 1942 act, for his sights are fixed on the post-war future of capital and private enterprise. The new tax law contains features which will help preserve and stabilize corporate incomes, he declares. "Congress," he says, "has quietly and reassuringly taken steps to protect capital."

The provisions of the 1942 revenue act which are chiefly responsible for this praise are three:

1. Corporations are now permitted to buy back their own bonds at a discount without incurring a tax liability on the difference between the purchase price and the par value.

2. By electing to use the "last in, first out" inventory method the taxpayer is given a measure of relief in the event depleted inventories must be replaced at higher prices after the war.

3. Cash refunds of taxes paid in years of large profits are possible thru the carrying back of net operating losses and unused excess profits tax credits.

The first of these new features needs no discussion. The second, relating to inventories, enables the taxpayer to adjust income upward or downward, retroactively, for the year in which inventories were liquidated, provided the inventories are replaced within three years of the war's end. If the replacement cost is greater than the original inventory figure, income for the year in which the liquidation occurred is reduced accordingly, with a corresponding reduction in the tax for that year. The rule works two ways, however, so that the taxpayer may have to pay additional taxes for the earlier year if the inventories are replaced at lower prices.

The third of the major changes, the carry back of net operating losses and unused excess profit tax credits, probably is the most important. Under the 1942 act these losses and unused credits may be carried back two years as well as forward, with the carry back being applied first. The taxpayer, because of the carry back, may be entitled to receive substantial refunds of taxes paid in prior years. The effect, therefore, is to provide a cushion against a possible post-war slump.

In the past, the government has been a fair weather partner of business enterprises. When a profit was earned, the government, thru the income tax, took a share, but when there was a loss the partnership was temporarily dissolved so far as the government was concerned. The revenue act of 1942 places the partnership on a more equitable basis.

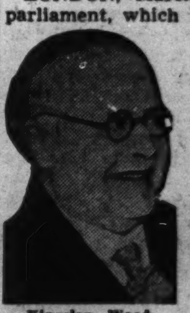
MOVE TO RETURN MONEY POWERS TO PARLIAMENT

Members Wary of Peace Financial Plans.

BY LARRY RUE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]



Kingsley Wood.

LONDON, March 20.—The British parliament, which has approved war credits of 15 billion pounds [about 60 billion dollars] without even voting, passed big budgets with little discussion, and permitted the treasury to issue 950 million pounds [about 3 billion 800 million dollars] of paper currency since the war began, moved this week to reassert its control over monetary matters. It sought to pierce the secrecy surrounding the British government's post-war world currency plan which was submitted to an interallied conference in London recently.

By persistent pressure, members of parliament drew a promise from Chancellor of the Exchequer Kingsley Wood that the plan will be published as a white paper "in the fairly near future" and also that the commons would be permitted to debate the subject before definite commitments are undertaken.

Apprehension Expressed.

These concessions were received with satisfaction, but some apprehension was expressed that "the near future" is too indefinite and that parliament may be confronted by negotiations so far advanced that a demand for their modification would upset international understanding.

For this reason, it is understood, Wood will be pressed at the next sitting of the house to set a date for publication of the white paper. So far no indication has been given that any allied government has expressed definite approval of the British scheme, which is said to involve radical changes in world financial and economic relations.

Whatever post-war system may be developed in an effort to restore world economic stability, there is no abatement in the suggestions put forward by both financial and the popular newspapers here that the United States should take the lead by lowering tariff barriers, continuing lend-lease, and even extending it to gold stocks.

New Budget Discussed.

Meanwhile, British government finance is beginning to play its seasonal part in restricting activity in the stock markets. With the financial year ending March 31, market observers are speculating how the chancellor of the exchequer proposes to cover budget requirements for the coming 12 months.

Industry, trade, and finance appear reconciled to the income tax remaining 10 shillings to the pound, but many are convinced that some increase in indirect taxation is in prospect because revenue figures indicate the public is spending even more than before the war on tobacco, beer, entertainment, and other unrationed goods and services despite the already heavy taxation of these items.

The latest treasury returns show revenue up to March 13 was 2 billion 664,500,000 pounds [about 10 billion 658 million dollars], already exceeding Wood's estimate for the full fiscal year by 37,400,000 pounds [approximately $149,600,000].

CARNEGIE POURS UNPRECEDENTED FLOW OF STEEL

Tops Rated Capacity to Do War Job.

BY THOMAS FURLONG.

C. H. Rhodes heads district operations.

For months the plant has been operating in excess of theoretical capacity. All 12 of its blast furnaces until recently had been in simultaneous operation for more than a year, an achievement which establishes an historic record for the steel industry.

Some phases of the story of this plant's participation in war production were revealed to a party of 60 that was taken on an inspection tour of the 1,400 acre plant site under army supervision.

Also visited for the first time by a civilian group was the armor plant adjoining the Gary works which is operated by Carnegie-Illinois.

Women Hold Varied Jobs.

An entirely new plant, built with government money at a cost of 50 million dollars, the armor unit is playing a vital part in the tank production program. It proved to be one of the outstanding features of the inspection tour.

Hints had been given earlier about the extent to which women are being employed in the plant but visitors were startled to see the variety of the tasks women are performing. They saw women operating overhead cranes, driving trucks in the plant area, operating acetylene armor cutting machines, testing, checking, and doing a number of other jobs that a few years ago were considered strictly the work of males.

Plant officials disclosed that nearly half of the workers in the armor plant are women. They are doing their jobs with a high degree of competency, officials said. Members of the visiting party noted that their presence in the plant was no distraction to the women, who did not interrupt their work to look at the visitors. The male workers were more inclined to look up than the women.

Experience Proves Abilities.

The proportion of women in the armor plant is by far the highest in any unit in the entire works except in divisions where jobs consist mainly of inspection. Thruout the entire works between 10 and 15 per cent of the employes are women. The percentage is rising, because experience is showing that women are capable of doing many jobs for which they hitherto have been considered unsuited.

Great slabs of hot steel are rolled into plate, blocked, and cut to size. In an adjoining building they get a complete ballistic test before being shipped to tank assembly plants.

At the sheet and tin mills the inspection party was shown how facilities for sheet production have been converted to the production of steel plate, one of the early bottlenecks of war production. Heavy plate is being turned out in large quantity for tanks, airplane landing mats, and steel plates. Steel for cartridge cases, bombs, ammunition cases, and tinless corrosion resistant food containers is produced also at this plant.

Operations Are Varied.

At the plant of the American Bridge company, another United States Steel subsidiary, visitors saw a number of war time production operations including the cutting of steel for cartridge case discs for ordnance and subassembly work on torpedo bulkheads, flight deck bents, and radio direction finders.

The inspection party, most of whom were civilians, included a number of army and naval officers. Conducting the tour were C. H. Rhodes, vice president of United States Steel corporation, in charge of Chicago district operations, and W. E. Hadley, manager of Chicago district operations of Carnegie-Illinois.

Fansteel Net Profit Rises to $3.65 a Share

"Unprecedented production" of war material characterized operations of the Fansteel Metallurgical corporation in 1942, President Robert J. Aitchison told stockholders in his annual report yesterday. Profits increased over the preceding year despite higher labor costs and a rise of more than 100 per cent in federal taxes.

Net income was $421,058, compared with $363,153 in 1941, excluding profits of the Vascoloy-Ramet corporation, a two-thirds owned subsidiary, whose net earnings increased to $497,222 from $268,816. Addition of two-thirds of this profit produced common per share earnings of the parent company of $3.65 against $2.45 a year ago.

Net sales rose 65 per cent and those of Vascoloy-Ramet corporation increased 130 per cent.

North American Car Gains.

North American Car corporation, Chicago, announced net income increased to $638,817 or $3.42 a common share last year from $553,177 or $2.76 a share in 1941. Federal and state income taxes increased to $493,308 from $213,208 the year before.

William E. Spencer, chairman of the board, said that at the end of the year the company had a fleet of 4,395 tank cars, 2,479 refrigerator cars, and 406 poultry cars.

Republic Aviation corporation, Farmingdale, Long Island, N. Y., had net earnings of $1,105,061, or $1.02 a share, in 1942, compared with $781,119, or 69 cents a share, in 1941. Federal income taxes were $915,000 and excess profits tax was $3,465,000, compared with $290,000 and $340,000 respectively in 1941.

FEBRUARY WAR OUTPUT NEARS DECEMBER PEAK

January Recession Largely Erased.

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—The war production board reported today an 8 per cent decline in war production in January was followed by an upswing in February which brought output almost back to the record level of December.

The graph shows the rise in munitions production, based on WPB index with November, 1941, equaling 100.

Chairman Donald M. Nelson said he omitted a separate report for January production and combined the January and February reports because of delays in obtaining January data.

The WPB production index, using November, 1941, as 100, declined from the 496 December peak to 457 in January, but rose to 492 in February.

Gains on Daily Basis.

February production, if figured on a daily basis for the short month, exceeded the December daily rate by 6 per cent, Nelson added. December production was unusually high owing to year-end adjustments, he said, and attributed the January decline to this factor.

Nelson gave the following box score showing monthly percentages of change by categories:

	Feb. compared with Jan.	Feb. compared with Dec.	Jan. compared with Dec.
Total munitions	+ 8	− 1	− 8
Aircraft	+10	+ 8	− 2
Ground ordnance	+11	−11	−20
Navy and army vessels	+ 2	−0.5	− 3
Merchant vessels	+ 4	+ 1	− 2
Misc. munitions	+ 6	− 1	− 7

Figures were based on WPB weighted averages which take account of value and types of items as well as numbers. The total number of airplanes produced in February was 9 per cent larger than in January, said Nelson, while output of heavy bombers increased 36 per cent.

Geared to Finished Weapons.

The report gave no figures on production. Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson has reported, however, that approximately 5,000 planes were produced in January and 5,500 in February.

Nelson said the nation's industrial organization now is geared to obtain a much higher proportion of finished weapons. Last year only a little more than half of war production, both munitions and construction, was translated into finished weapons such as airplanes, tanks, and ships. This year about three-fourths of all war production will be devoted to making finished weapons.

AIRCRAFT UNITS IN MIDDLE WEST FORM COUNCIL

Detroit, Mich., March 20 (AP).—Formation of a central aircraft council, embracing leading aircraft manufacturers in the central states, was announced today by Ernest R. Breech, president of Bendix Aviation corporation.

Breech, chairman of the council, said it would arrange for interchange of information on production techniques, engineering improvements, and materials saving.

The council's sole objective, he said, "is to expedite the mass production of aircraft and aircraft material needed by the United States or its allies."

U. S. to Buy All Quota Coffee Left in Brazil

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 20 (AP).—United States Ambassador Jefferson Caffery and Brazil's Finance Minister Arthur de Souza Costa announced today that the United States would start the immediate purchase of the unshipped portions of Brazil's coffee quotas for the quota years of 1941-'42 and 1942-'43 under terms of the Brazilian-United States coffee agreement signed last October.

This new step in economic coöperation was announced at a time when war obstacles to shipping were causing grave concern, and after months of careful study. By it, the United States assures Brazil of coffee sales totaling 11,959,279 bags—or 1,578,624,828 pounds at 132 pounds to the bag—during the course of the agreement.

Agrees to Buy Remainder.

The unshipped portion of the 1941-'42 quota was set at 2,659,279 bags. In addition, the United States agreed to buy as much of the 1942-'43 basic quota of 9,300,000 bags as remains unshipped by private traders at the end of the quota year on Sept. 30.

Brazil is entitled to this basic quota into the United States under the inter-American coffee pact signed a few years ago.

An official announcement said purchases would be made thru the Commodity Credit corporation from accredited coffee exporters and in conformity with New York Coffee exchange standards.

Follows Normal Channels.

The agreement further provides for all transactions to be made thru regular commercial channels in accord with normal trade practices.

The announcement said precautions would be taken to prevent the purchase operation from adversely affecting established coffee markets and current trading. It was believed that part of the coffee would be destined for military use, for lend-lease, and relief purposes.

Keller Leaves Studebaker.

South Bend, Ind., March 20 [Special].—The resignation of George D. Keller as vice president of the Studebaker corporation was announced today by Paul G. Hoffman, president.

MINERS REJECT PLEA THAT U. S. SETTLE DISPUTE

Southern Operators Will Act Alone.

New York, March 20 (AP).—The United Mine Workers of America tonight voted down a proposal by the Southern Coal Producers association to submit jointly and immediately to the government disputes over wages in the drafting of a contract to replace the one expiring March 31.

Edward R. Burke, president of the southern operators, told reporters that the mine owners would submit the case to the government independently of the miners. He added, however, that the operators will continue to hold joint conferences with the UMW representatives.

Following the miners' decision tonight the session was adjourned until Monday morning.

Expects to Reach Agreement.

John O'Leary, vice president of the United Mine Workers, said the miners voted down the proposal "because we are of the opinion that we can reach an agreement without government interference."

Northern and southern operators and members of the UMW have been meeting here for nine days in an attempt to agree on a new wage contract. The coal miners have demanded, among other things, an increase of $2 per day in wages for some 450,000 workmen.

Burke, asking the miners to join in the action to put the entire matter before some branch of the government, had said:

"Since it is to the interest of both parties to have a final decision at the earliest possible date, and since that decision must be made by government, we urge that you join with us in a prompt submission of all matters in dispute affecting wage increases."

PREDICT STRIKE BAN

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—A number of congressmen of both major parties, watching contract negotiations between John L. Lewis and bituminous coal mine operators, expressed the view tonight that any walkout by the miners would be followed swiftly by legislation to outlaw strikes for the duration.

Rep. James W. Mott [R., Ore.] said such a bill has been prepared, to be introduced if developments warrant.

Martin Predicts Action.

House Minority Leader Joseph W. Martin [R., Mass.] asserted that "a strike at this time would intensify the demand for corrective legislation."

Rep. Robert Ramspeck [D., Ga.], Democratic whip and a ranking member of the house labor committee, asserted:

"It would inevitably stir congress into acting on labor legislation. If there is actually a strike, unquestionably restrictive labor legislation will be considered."

Rep. E. E. Cox [D., Ga.] likewise observed that "I think a coal strike would surely result in legislation dealing with the whole situation. As far as I'm concerned, I'd outlaw all strikes against the government in time of war—and by that I mean strikes against industry engaged in war production."

Rep. Frank B. Keefe [R., Wis.] declared that "the threat of a coal strike places the responsibility clearly upon the government to act."

Florsheim Shoe Company Elects Two New Officers

Two additional officers were elected and all incumbent officers and directors of the Florsheim Shoe company were reëlected yesterday at the annual meeting, Irving Florsheim, president, announced. The new officers are J. B. Stancliffe, vice president, and S. F. Egan, assistant secretary.

Curb Wage and Price Boosters, National Trade Group Urges

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—The Chamber of Commerce of the United States said today that the nation would not avoid "extreme inflation" unless the administration acted firmly to resist "pressure groups" seeking higher wages and prices.

"We now definitely have the conditions conducive for extreme inflation," the chamber said in the second of a series of bulletins sponsored by its committee on economic policy.

Criticizes Brown's Attitude.

"We have prices fixed for most commodities and we have inaugurated widespread rationing. While these may be desirable steps, they do not deal with the fundamental cause of inflation — the rise of the money means of payment or buying power of the civilian population.

"The pressure of organized groups to raise wages and prices, with no equivalent counter-pressure to depress costs in the face of price ceilings, is not conducive to the expansion of the supplies of scarce consumer products — a condition necessary to reduce inflationary tendencies. Upon assuming office in January, 1943, Prentiss Brown, the price administrator, announced that he expected a price rise of one-half of one per cent per month; obviously, this opened the door and gave the pressure groups an invitation to try to get ahead of the prospective inflation.

Asks More Consumer Goods.

"Unless this tendency is stopped by firm administrative action we will not avoid extreme inflation."

The chamber listed as the "essential methods" for averting a runaway in prices:

1. Financing of a larger part of war costs by taxation and war bond sales to individuals and savings institutions instead of to commercial banks.
2. Expansion of consumer goods production where possible.
3. Price ceilings, with limits on wages and farm products.
4. Rationing of essential commodities.

Mandel Sales Top 20 Million, but Profit Dips

Sales of Mandel Brothers, Inc., increased in the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1943, rising above the 20 million dollar mark, and profit before federal taxes was higher than in the preceding year, but net earnings after taxes declined, the company disclosed yesterday in its annual report.

Profit before deductions for federal income and excess profits taxes was $816,527, compared with $731,183 on the same basis in the preceding year. After provisions for the taxes, net income was $426,527, against $504,183. The total tax bill, exclusive of the Illinois sales tax and the federal retailers' excise taxes, rose to $891,076, from $674,548 in the preceding year. Sales were $20,235,810, compared with $19,815,152.

The report, signed by Edwin F. Mandel, president, and J. S. Kaufman, vice president and general manager, said that the company had no indebtedness to banks as of Jan. 31, or at the present time. The ratio of assets to current liabilities was listed at 4.20 to 1, compared with 3.82 to 1 a year earlier. Book value of the stock was given as $21.59 a share on Jan. 31, against $20.35, and net quick assets were $16.50 a share, compared with $14.87.

OPA SCHEDULES MEETINGS WITH FOOD INDUSTRIES

Details of the meat rationing program will be explained by John Madigan, chief of the meat branch of the OPA food rationing division, to meat packers, sausage makers, and primary meat distributors tomorrow in the Drake hotel.

Other conferences for discussion of the rationing program include a meeting of butter and cheese industry representatives with the OPA tomorrow in the La Salle hotel, a meeting of meat dealers and retail grocers with the OPA in the Midland hotel Tuesday, and a meeting of the OPA and representatives of the edible oils and fats industry Wednesday in the La Salle.

LAW GIVES NO CHOICE IN WAGE STAND, WLB GROUP TELLS CRITICS

Washington, D. C., March 20 (AP).—Employer members of the war labor board said in a statement today that "presumably, most leaders of labor do not realize, or perhaps they wish to forget, that congress passed a wage stabilization act, signed by the President on Oct. 2, 1942."

The statement, over the signature of Roger D. Lapham, as chairman of the employers' group on the WLB, said: "It is quite apparent that labor would like to have the war labor board close its eyes to the mandatory provisions of the act and executive order, which instructs the war labor board to stabilize wages at the Sept. 15 level, with certain exceptions.

"The success of the stabilization program depends on factors other than wages—team play is required. But if those in charge of price control, rationing or what not, fail to hit the line as hard as they should, that's no reason for us to slow up."

PREDICT RECORD COAL MOVEMENT BY LAKE VESSELS

Cleveland, O., March 20 [Special].—A record coal movement of near 53 million tons seems assured this season, shippers said today.

Severe weather and accelerated industrial demands have depleted stocks at all lake ports since the close of the 1942 shipping season. The office of defense transportation, according to reliable information, will not renew its restrictions on coal movement by bulk freighters.

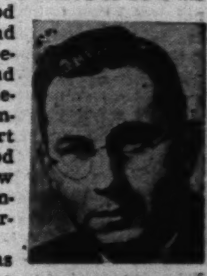
Five new ships built for the Pittsburgh Steamship company will be available thruout the season and 16 now being constructed for the maritime commission will be available later in the year. With the fleet thus augmented, vessel men are confident they can set a new coal record in addition to transporting 95 million tons of iron ore.

U. S. RANK AS BIG SURPLUS FOOD NATION IS LOST

Relied on Imports Before War.

BY ROBERT YOUNG.

The United States, contrary to popular belief, had ceased to be a nation of large food surpluses and heavy exports before the war and actually was depending on imports for a part of its normal food supply, a review of statistics emphasized yesterday.



Tom G. Stitts says nation was handicapped as cheese exporter.

As recently as 1940 and 1941, the United States was importing meat, butter and cheese. Beef imports were six times as much as exports two years ago. In 1941, the year lend-lease began, pork exports were larger than imports, but the imports were still sizable. Exports of butter were only moderately larger than imports during the years just before the United States entered the war.

Set Record in 1918.

Exports of beef reached an all-time high of 521 million pounds in 1918, but by 1941 had dropped to 15 million pounds. Prior to the first World war, beef imports were generally less than a million pounds annually, but rose to 184 million pounds in 1915. During the 1920s and '30s imports ranged from 20 million to 96 million pounds a year, and were 87 and 90 million, respectively, in 1940 and 1941.

Pork shipments have followed a similar trend. From a record of 1 billion 961 million pounds in 1919, ex-

WHEN TO GET OUT

Tactics to follow in an inflationary market which has just risen 40%.

The fact that the Dow has recently risen 40% does not automatically constitute a bull market. There were two rises of over 40% in the bear market of 1929-32, namely Nov./Apr. 1929-30 (51%); June/July 1931 (33%); Oct./Nov. 1931 (41%).

In other words, the magnitude of the recent rise does not automatically prove that it is other than a large rally in a continuing bear market. In deciding such matters one must be inflation conscious and use one's head, not history.

This Major Angas attempts to do in Digest 112, now on press, in which he answers the following questions which are puzzling every intelligent investor:—

1. Is it too late to climb on board?
2. Is not a final flare-up (rather than reaction) now due?
3. Can the Dow rise this year to over 200?
4. What to do if you have missed the market.
5. Is a reaction to 100 still on the cards?

STOCKS DEVELOP FIRMNESS WHEN SELLING SHRINKS

Drop for Week Largest Since April.

New York, March 20 (AP).—Selling in the stock market dried up appreciably today and many leaders, including yesterday's weak rails, developed firmness. Prices during the week were the weakest since last April.

Carrier issues recovered today after a lower opening and, with trade dwindling, prices were no worse than mixed at the close.

The Associated Press 60 stock composite was unchanged at 45.8, but for the week was off .9, largest drop since the week ended April 18, 1942. Transfers of 484,290 shares set a low mark since Jan. 23 and compared with 829,830 last Saturday.

Bath Iron Works and Ex-Cello-O advanced a point each to 1943 peaks. Modest improvement was shown for Southern Railway, Great Northern, United States Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, and Western Union. Yesterday's strong air transports were quiet. Losers included American Telephone, United States Rubber, Texas company, and International Harvester.

RAIL BOND TRADE EASES.

New York, March 20 (AP).—Profit cashing in rail issues softened prices over a wide section of the bond market today, but enough carriers achieved gains to leave the Associated Press rail average unchanged. Dealings in the rails were at a more moderate pace.

Industrial and utility groups were slightly higher and United States government loans were quiet.

CHICAGO LIST LOWER.

Chicago Stock exchange prices declined yesterday on turnover of 11,000 shares. Volume leaders included Midland United, unchanged; Chicago corporation, Miller & Hart, and Paramount, down ⅛. In the final half hour, American Radiator, Aviation corporation, and Gillette advanced ⅛, and Paramount rose ¼ from the New York close.

WHEAT AND RYE LOSE EARLY RISE; OATS REACH HIGH

House passage late Friday of the Pace bill to include farm labor costs in computing parity prices on agricultural products had relatively little effect as a price making influence yesterday on the Chicago Board of Trade. Wheat advanced about ½ cent early, but reacted to close ¾ cent lower at $1.45⅛ a bushel for May delivery. Rye, after a similar early rise, closed off ⅜ to ⅝ cent.

Oats developed independent strength, May reaching a new 14 year high of 63½ cents and closing ⅛ cent under that figure for a net gain of 1 cent. Buying was induced by reports that a meeting to consider raising the Canadian oats ceiling price will be held at Ottawa Monday.

The cash corn market continued in a state of confusion as brokers, country dealers, and farmers awaited further revisions expected to be made in ceiling prices for grain testing more than 15½ per cent moisture.

SURPLUS FOODS POSITION OF U. S. LONG ON DECLINE

ports dropped to 140 million in 1940 and 66 million in 1941. Imports were irregular during the two decades after the first World war, but rose to a peak of 64 million pounds in 1938. The imports decreased to 17 million in 1940 and 12 million in 1941 when the European war cut off trade with Denmark, Poland, and the Baltic countries.

Altho it is the world's leading dairy nation, the United States long has been an importer of butter. Imports were larger than exports from 1925 thru 1928, then were approximately equal until 1935 when imports gained sharply to 22,675,000 pounds and compared with exports of 958,000 pounds. In 1936, imports declined to 9,874,000 pounds, while exports were only 826,000, but the next year imports increased to 11,111,000 pounds, compared with exports of 800,000. Exports gained moderately over imports in the next three years.

Cheese Flow Reversed.

Last year 314 million pounds of American cheese was exported thru lend-lease, compared with 93 million pounds in 1941. Before lend-lease, however, the nation was a cheese importer, rather than exporter. The war cut off sources of more than half of the foreign cheese normally taken to meet domestic demand.

Tom G. Stitts, chief of the dairy and poultry branch of the food distribution administration, said the United States began its career as an exporter of cheese "from behind the goal line, being obligated to shift to an export basis at a time when it wasn't even self-sufficient."

One of the most serious disruptions of the war has been the drastic curtailment of imported oils, notably coconut and palm oils, which came principally from the Philippines, the South seas, and Africa. They were used in the manufacture of margarine, shortening, and soap. From 1921 thru 1940 imports of coconut oil ranged from 309 to 772 million pounds annually, and 573 million were imported in the first nine months of 1941, latest figures available. This total included both oil and oil equivalent of the copra imported for crushing here.

Output of Oil Rises.

The United States until a few years ago also imported considerable quantities of peanut and soy bean oils, but shipments declined with the sharp rise in domestic production. Expansion of soy bean, peanut, and cotton crops and increased crushing capacity is expected to offset to a large extent the loss of foreign vegetable oils.

Imports also have been depended upon for production of food. Prior to the war, the United States imported more than 250,000 tons of meat scraps annually for high protein live stock feed. The almost complete loss of these imports—principally from Australia, New Zealand, and Argentina—has been a major factor in the present severe shortage of protein feeds which threatens war food production.

This country in recent years has had to import feed grains from time to time. During the period of drouth in the mid-1930s, millions of bushels of foreign corn were shipped in.

BEEF AND VEAL OUTPUT SHOWS LARGE DECLINE

Decrease Is Most Severe in Chicago Plants.

Production of beef and veal in packing plants under federal inspection is falling short of last fall's record volume by more than 100,000 tons a month, data supplied by the department of agriculture disclosed yesterday. The shrinkage in both meats and hides is far larger than even the most pessimistic in the industry had forecast and is the biggest for any five months on government records.

Despite the recent report by the department that farm cattle population on Jan. 1 was at an all time high, actual tonnage of beef and veal produced during the last three months fell almost 70,000 tons below the first quarter of 1942. The decline was the result of both fewer numbers and lighter weights. The shrinkage in per head weight was attributed to the method of placing ceilings on beef prices which discourages "finishing" of cattle to heavyweights.

Veal Slump 54 Per Cent.

Output of beef under federal inspection is running 26 per cent below the record volume last October, and veal production is down 54 per cent. Part of this slump can be attributed to a seasonal decline which usually occurs after the western range selling dries up in the late fall. No one, however, had expected such a decline as this. The seasonal decrease from October to March was 14 per cent for beef and 24 per cent for veal both last year and two years ago.

Production of beef last fall was running 5 per cent heavier than a year earlier, but preliminary estimates place this month's output 16 per cent below March last year. The veal output, up 17 per cent last fall, has tumbled to 22 per cent under a year ago. Beef production has been falling steadily from 609,709,000 pounds last October to 450 million pounds in March, the lowest in 22 months.

Inspected plants during the three months December thru February produced an estimated 715,428 tons of beef against 778,475 tons a year earlier. Veal for the three months totaled 62,158 tons compared with 68,520 a year ago.

Leather Loss Is Severe.

Fewer and lighter cattle have resulted in a severe drop in output of packer hides. Experts estimate that the three month shrinkage in hide production from inspected plants represented a loss of leather equivalent to more than two million pairs of army shoes.

Packers in the Chicago area were hit harder by the shrinkage in volume than those in most other regions, a breakdown by the department of agriculture of cattle handled by inspected plants last month showed.

The industry in the Chicago area butchered 18 per cent fewer cattle than a year ago. Other regions combined showed a shrinkage of less than 2 per cent. Chicago packers under inspection slaughtered 23 per cent fewer calves last month than in February, 1942, and the decline for other regions combined amounted to 15 per cent.

Build 100 New Homes in Steel Belt

SERVE WORKERS IN BIG CALUMET WAR INDUSTRIES

Use Priorities Recaptured by Government.

This is the fourth and last of a series of stories on recent new home construction for war workers in the neighborhood of Chicago's four big outlying war plant areas.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

More than 100 new war homes, with living accommodations for approximately 300 workers, are under construction, or will be shortly in the far southeastern part of Chicago, near the great war plants of the Calumet steel belt, Edward J. Kelly, state director of federal housing administration, said yesterday. These new living units are being built with part of the 1,100 building priorities recaptured by FHA from builders who failed to use them. They are located in part of the industrial area placed by the war man power commission on a mandatory 48 hour week, effective May 1.

Frank J. Lewis.

As recently reported in this series of articles on war housing, 300 priorities were allocated to the area about the Douglas plant, 400 to the western area where Buick, Amertorp, Electro-Motive, Aluminum, and other big plants are located, and 300 assigned to the neighborhood of the big Dodge-Chicago plant.

Need Fewer Homes.

The reason the southeast section of Chicago was allotted fewer home priorities than the other three was the lesser need for homes in that area because of the extensive private housing program of the last two years. Also the Chicago housing authority built Trumbull Park homes in south Chicago, with 462 living units.

The biggest home project in the southeast area utilizing recaptured priorities is in the hands of a pioneer residential builder in that part of Chicago, Frank J. Lewis, a retired manufacturer and philanthropist, whose firm, Fair Elms Homes, Inc., is headed by his son, John Lewis.

Lewis has been given priorities for 50 new homes and last week work was started on them in the vicinity of Avenue J and East 112th street. Half of these two story duplex homes will be for sale and half for rent. All are expected to be ready for occupancy by June. Rudolph P. Boehm is architect.

All to Be for Rent.

Best Homes, Inc., owned by the Burnside Construction company, has priorities for 31 living units, all for rent. Fifteen are being built on Avenue N, between 107th and 108th streets, four at Forest and 107th, and six on Avalon, between 95th and 96th. Harold Anderson is architect.

Ringman-Hansen-Dunlop, Inc., has priorities for 17 units—8 duplex buildings with 16 homes—on 93d street, between Clyde and Chappel, and one single family residence at Merrill and 93d. All will be for sale. Completion will range from June to September. Buss & De Kreek company is architect.

The Ringman firm has completed 10 homes on Avenue N between 107th and 108th streets, all of which are sold or rented. It built 29 homes on both sides of Avenue M between 107th and 108th streets in 1941, all of them sold.

Expect June Occupancy.

Priorities for 13 homes were granted to H. J. Bluhm & Co. and the architect, Edward H. Anderson, expects them to be ready for occupancy by June 1. Half will be for rent, half for sale. They are being built on both sides of Union avenue, between 125th and 126th streets.

Following the suggestion of FHA practically all of the builders are planning for three bedrooms—one arranged so it can be converted into a dining room. This method gives the tenant additional income if he rents the extra room to a war worker and provides more living quarters for Chicago's war plant employés.

New Rental Homes in Lansing

Title Search Shows Origin of Wolf Road

Origin of the name of Wolf road, one of Cook county's longest north and south highways, was revealed in the tracing of the title to Woodland Acres, the Robert Bartlett Realty company's newest development, a 264 acre tract adjoining Mokena on the west and south.

According to F. E. Merrill, sales manager of the firm, the once powerful Algonquin Indian tribe which inhabited New York state in the 17th century was divided into three major clans known as the "Bear," the "Wolf," and the "Turtle."

Moved to the Prairies.

In 1670 the "Wolf" clan moved westward to what is now northern Indiana and Illinois. Many of its members made their hunting grounds in the Kankakee area and over a period of years beat a well traveled trail to the north.

This trail was named "Theak-a-kee Yan-ac-kee" which, according to translaters, means "the trail of the wolf thru the wonderful land." White settlers changed the name to Wolf trail and later to Wolf road, the name it bears today.

Former Cappel Estate.

Woodland acres comprises the former Cappel estate and was purchased by Bartlett thru Grover C. Elmore & Co., brokers, represented by Franklin Eulette. Most of the land fronts on the west side of Wolf road. Some of the southern part is on the east side of that highway. Hard roads connecting with Wolf road are under construction. Much of the land is wooded with virgin timber.

The property is to be sold in one, two, and five acre tracts ranging upward in price from $395.

NORTHWESTERN CUTS HOLDINGS OF REALTY $195,416 IN 2 YEARS

Real estate holdings of Northwestern university decreased $195,416 during 1941 and 1942 Harry L. Wells, business manager, announced yesterday. Fifty pieces of realty were sold for a total of $527,060, and 20 other parcels valued at $331,644 were acquired, principally thru gifts to the university or defaults on mortgages.

The university sold 11 pieces of Evanston property for a total of $149,190 and acquired nine with a value of $173,644. Five of the acquisitions were the result of mortgage defaults, one was a gift, and three were bought for educational purposes.

The property gift was the Charles Gates Dawes residence at 225 Greenwood street, and its value represented a large part of the value of Evanston property acquired during the two years, Wells said.

It will serve as a historical center on the Northwest territory and render community service by providing office rooms and exhibit space for the Evanston Historical society.

"We are not seeking property for investment purposes today," Wells said. "It is the policy of the university not to buy real estate except when it is contiguous to the campus, and then we will buy it only for educational purposes, either present or future.

"Properties which have come to us thru mortgage defaults will be sold whenever buyers can be found."

Urge Housewives to Guard Against Cleaning Mishaps

The Greater Chicago Safety council yesterday warned housewives to guard against home accidents and injury in spring housecleaning. $50,000 RAINEY BONDS FOUND IN A "VACANT" BOX

Roodhouse, Ill., March 20 [Special].—Securities valued in excess of $50,000 belonging to Mrs. Ella M. Rainey, 83 year old widow of Henry T. Rainey, former speaker of the house of representatives, have been located in a safety deposit box listed as vacant in the First National Bank and Trust company at Alton, Ill.

This discovery, which ends a two year search for $45,000 in unregistered government bonds missing from Mrs. Rainey's estate, was announced today by A. B. Johnson, attorney for A. L. Clark of Roodhouse, conservator of the estate. Mrs. Rainey is now in a sanitarium in Peoria.

Johnson said officials of the bank informed him they discovered the securities in opening box No. 121, which appeared on their records as vacant. In June, 1941, box No. 120, listed as Mrs. Rainey's, was opened under a court order and was found empty. Johnson said that box No. 121 yielded in addition to the $45,000 in government bonds about $5,000 in other securities. A clerical error was blamed for the mixup.

TOOLMAKING, GAGEMAKING and precision production center, Springfield, Mass. is also home of the United States Armory. A beautiful five-mile drive away, along the Connecticut River [war workers are entitled to cars, gasoline and tires] in suburban Agawam is Research & Engineering Company's splendidly equipped new mechanical laboratory. People who ought to know describe it as one of the finest in the country. Here, under ideal conditions, nearly fifty high type male and femaleworkers are happily doing vital war work. Attracted from far and near, some live in tiny but ultramodern new homes which are open on a low rental or purchase basis to war workers. Many of these people were and are being trained by us with the co-operation of Springfield's $3,000,000 Trade Schools and N. Y. A. Others were top tool and gage makers before the first World War. In our laboratory, one nineteen year old girl, Jean Forsythe, already earns over $50 per 48-hour week. $100 per 60-hour week is the base rate for tool and gage makers. The spreading fame of our work already has won for us customers from as far away as San Francisco. Far along in its formative stages, determined, hardfighting and purposeful in its effort to create peacetime jobs is Research & Engineering's world-wide organization for financing, developing, testing, patenting, manufacturing and marketing useful new inventions - - ANYONES! Top notch tool and gage makers, precision grinders, machinists, supervisors, estimators, engineers, white collar workers, etc. seeking boundless opportunity will find one here. Send in your employment record and proof of your place and date of birth. If it seems mutually advantageous you will be invited to attend a meeting. The entire endeavor will be thoroughly disclosed and you can present your further qualifications in person. Though welcome to the meeting to see how our organization pioneers new things, those now in war work will not be considered for employment until after war ends. J. R. Fish, Research & Engineering Company, Agawam, Mass.

Marketing Research
FIELD SURVEYS
The war and expansion of the largest national marketing research company [with over 700 permanent employees] have created several field positions for intelligent, capable women.
These field positions entail exacting marketing research audits of essential consumer goods. Two to three months of thorough training [at full salary] before the successful applicants would be assigned to a field territory. Desirable ages, 22 to 38.
Training salary, $130 per month, with increases thereafter based on ability to assume responsibility.
Field territorial assignment would in all probability be away from the Chicago area. A car is essential, with full allowances for its operation. Complete travel expenses. All moving costs borne by our company.
Please give us a complete outline of your education and business experience and details of your age, religion, and marital status.
This is an unusual opportunity for several women to join the outstanding marketing research organization whose expansion and post-war potentialities are unlimited.

Plan Anti-Rat Drive.

March 20, 1943.

FARMERS who want to produce big crops of grains this year, and suburbanite gardeners who will be storing vegetables in their basements, will have to be especially aggressive in anti-rat campaigns, if losses caused by these pests are to be cut to a minimum. Inasmuch as early spring is one of the best times of the year to kill rats, experts on rodent control are advising immediate action against common house rats. As soon as mild weather is here to stay the rodents that destroy millions of dollars worth of foodstuffs each year leave warm buildings for the outdoors and then are more difficult to kill.

How to Use Poisons.

G. C. Odekirk, district agent of the United States division of predator and rodent control, with offices at Purdue university, says that home owners or tenants have to outsmart rats in several ways if they want to trick them into taking poisonous baits. Odekirk makes this practical comment on the use of poison: The steps taken before exposure of poisoned baits are as important as the kind of poison and the kind of food with which it is mixed. His suggestions follow:

Wrapping unpoisoned food materials in small squares of paper and exposing them for several nights until rats are accustomed to taking this food, then following it with a poisoned preparation, is one way of getting them to take the poison.

Rats can be lured to certain points to feed from pans, if the pans containing an unpoisoned food material are covered lightly to give the impression that the food is being kept from them. Once accustomed to this attention, they more readily consume the poison mixture. Small amounts of food should first be exposed, followed by a large serving of the poison preparation.

Red Squill Excellent.

The poison selected should be in keeping with the hazards involved in its use. If there is a chance that animals or children might be injured, it is best to use red squill powder, which is relatively harmless to animals other than rats. Ten per cent of red squill, or one and three-fourths ounces of squill to one pound of bait material such as fish, meat, or bread is the right mixture.

Red squill to kill rats has been used on the Wheaton farm for several seasons. It is the safest poison to use anywhere, any time. The powder may be obtained thru a druggist and then mixed with meat, fish, or bread. [One year we were able to buy squill already mixed. Small amounts of this moist meat, fish and squill mixture were wrapped in papers and placed in the barns.]

American women in war industry now revel in work clothing that is safe as well as chic. Short-sleeved slack suits with slim silhouettes, safety caps and turbans which keep feminine hair out of machinery, safety shoes for women's feet—these are the innovations. Samples below are in actual everyday use in American industry.

Below: Douglas Aircraft workers like this clean-cut design. The cap has removable brim and pads to protect head.

Right: Gayly striped blouse relieves severity of "defense-all" costume and is interchangeable. Garment is buttonless.

Safety shoes such as the two models pictured at left already have saved thousands of feminine feet from serious injury. The black model has a box toe which withstands great crushing pressure. The brown shoe passes all safety requirements. They are sold by Chicago stores.

FROM A WAR CORRESPONDENT'S DIARY

The Zeros Worked Us Over

This is a chapter from the journal of a Tribune war correspondent, now on leave in this country. In it and subsequent chapters he tells of his experiences and his observation of American and Japanese fighting men and equipment in the New Guinea campaign.

By E. R. NODERER

JUST BEFORE first light this morning an officer shook me roughly and demanded: "Do you want to die in bed?" I said no.

Then he told me we were going to move our camp out of the open palm village into the jungle—Jap planes were expected as soon as dawn broke.

Just before dark last evening a Zero roared down the beach at an altitude of 10 feet and the pilot leered at us under the tops of the coconut palms. We could see his face plainly. He seemed to be grinning, as if anticipating a little surprise for us. Earlier in the evening Zeros and dive bombers had sunk two of our small supply ships just offshore, and had given us a little working over with their machine guns and cannon. When we saw that Jap's evil grin as he flew by, we knew we'd hear from him again.

"A tin hat is a very handy piece of equipment." Soldiers in New Guinea use a helmet as an old oaken bucket.

I liked that reference to a "bed." With three other correspondents, I was sleeping on a bamboo platform which had once formed the floor of a palm leaf hut. The sides and roof were missing, but some of the uprights remained and we'd stretched our shelter halves over them in an attempt to ward off those bucketfuls of rain that kept pouring from the sky.

We hated to leave the slit trenches we'd dug with our mess kits after the strafing of the night before, but after a little palaver set up camp about 50 feet northeast of the village. If we went much farther forward we would be in range of the enemy's mortars, and to go to the rear meant wading a stream up to our necks every time we wanted to go to the front.

With our 12 inch knives we slashed a 10 foot square clearing in the jungle, and then cut down some trees for tent poles and stakes. We spread our single blanket on the ground, slung the mosquito nets, and the job was done, except for digging a shallow trench around the pup tent in an attempt to keep out the water.

As we worked we munched pineapples and coconuts for breakfast.

The next couple of hours were spent digging trenches. This job is hard enough at any time, but particularly difficult in the jungle, where the soil is a mass of roots which have to be chopped out one by one. However, a little later we were glad we had gone to so much trouble.

After we had our camp up, we found we were just below an ammunition dump, which we hadn't seen thru the thick jungle. We were in a pretty good place to get hit by an artillery "over" aimed at the dump, or a "short" aimed at the village.

Most of the time we ate in a chow line with the troops or officers, holding out our mess kits as the cook sloshed in the bully or stew, but today we had to eat our emergency rations. There was no other food after the enemy sank our supply vessels. More is expected soon, but in the meantime we built a fire and in a couple of tin cans heated some C ration and cooked some rice. The C ration is a meat and vegetable hash, and with the rice is a pretty tasty combination, especially if you're hungry. We also heated some water and made coffee with the powdered coffee that forms part of the emergency ration.

We get our drinking water from a swamp on the edge of the village. It is full of dirt and bugs and is pretty black, but after it is chlorinated is not bad. The soldiers have dug several shallow wells back from the beach and we dip water out of them in a tin hat, but it is blacker and tastes worse than the water in the swamp.

It took me an hour to shave today. I borrowed a tin hat to keep the water in, and every time a Jap plane came over the correspondent who owned the hat made me dump the water out and give it back to him. Then I'd have to get more water from the swamp. Haven't seen any hot water for three months.

A tin hat is a very handy piece of equipment. I have one of the old style ones, but the new scuttlebutt jobs can be used for carrying water, washing clothes, or taking a bath. We don't take as many baths as we might. Usually we walk thru two or three rivers every day with our clothes on and we figure this cleans both us and our clothes. We're never really dry. If we don't get wet during the day, we do at night when the rain comes thru the top and bounces in underneath our pup tents. It forms in puddles in the low spots of the ground we sleep on, which necessitates some fancy doubling up in an attempt to keep dry.

I'm the only one of our little group who undresses at night. That is, I take my shoes off. But last night I had to put them back on to keep my feet dry. We never take our clothes off for two reasons. One is we need them to help keep us warm. Another is that if the Japs, who aren't very far away, made a commando raid on the camp, we might want to depart rather suddenly. We all keep a water bottle, chlorine, and quinine handy, just in case. With the canteen and chlorine we could have safe drinking water, and the quinine would help in fighting off malaria. We could live for a time on coconuts, pineapples, pawpaws, and bananas if we had to "go bush" in a hurry. But we don't think much about this. Our idea is to get the Japs on the run.

Just before noon we heard them coming. The angry snarl of the Japs' radial motors came in from over the sea, and we moved over beside our trenches. The enemy planes swept straight in from the sea at water level and took a good look at two Australian artillery pieces being assembled under the palms of our village.

They darted back out to sea, climbed like elevators, and turned back toward us.

We lay face down in our trenches, our foreheads resting on our folded arms, and our tin hats on the back of our heads. First the Zeros worked the camp over, machine guns stuttering and cannons exploding with a dull plop-plop-plop. It made me think of a sewing machine running up and down a piece of canvas. I felt like the canvas.

Then the dive bombers came. There was a roar as they dived in, and then a moment's silence as they flattened out a little to let the bomb go. The silence was a moment of awful suspense, for we knew it would be followed by the ear-shattering crash of the bomb.

The first one fell about 50 feet from us, shaking the earth and sending a shower of sand into our trench. Huge coconut trees crashed to the ground and there was the smell of cordite in the air. More bombs fell, and then the strafers gave us another going over while the bombers gained altitude for another try. For 15 minutes we were alternately bombed and strafed, but when it was over not much damage had been done. Several men had been killed and several others wounded. A coconut palm had been knocked down across one of the guns, but little damage was done.

Amazing New Survey Reveals
American Family Flakes Preferred 3 to 1
Over All Other Soaps for Wartime Washings

"I DON'T DO HARD RUBBING TO GET MY CLOTHES WHITE since I started to use American Family Flakes, so my clothes don't wear out." Mrs. H. R. Houle (8012 South Jeffery Ave.)

"MY COLORED THINGS GLOW AFTER MANY WASHINGS since I gave up strong granulated soaps and started to use American Family Flakes." Mrs. Fred Schulz (7928 South Euclid Ave.)

"MY CLOTHES GET LESS 'WASHER WEAR,' LAST LONGER now that I'm using American Family Flakes instead of less efficient soaps." Mrs. E. Moline (9943 Calumet)

NO OTHER SOAP CAN MAKE THIS CLAIM

Right here in Chicago, women actually voted American Family Flakes their favorite 3 to 1 over all chips, powders and granulated soaps! Here are three of the reasons why: First, American Family Flakes' rich, hard-working suds get clothes sparkling white without ruinous rubbing, or harmful bleaching. Second, colored washables stay bright and gay much longer than when strong, granulated soaps are used. Third, 'washer-wear' is cut amazingly because clothes are in the washing machine less time than when less efficient soaps are used. That's why clothes last longer the American Family Flakes way. So, every washday use American Family Flakes and give your clothes the wartime protection this great soap affords.

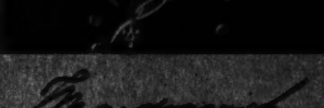
DISTINGUISHED AMERICANS

● This is another in a series of biographical sketches of America's historical celebrities appearing every week in the Graphic Section. The illustrations are taken from a famous work, "The National Portrait Gallery of Distinguished Americans," published in 1865.



THOMAS MACDONOUGH, naval officer and hero of the War of 1812, was born at The Trap, now Macdonough, Del., Dec. 31, 1783. In his 17th year he entered the navy as a midshipman. In the hostilities with the corsairs of Tripoli he served first on the frigate Constellation and later on the frigate Philadelphia. Still later he was transferred to the Enterprise, commanded by Capt. Stephen Decatur.

He took part in the burning of the Philadelphia, which in the meantime had been captured by the enemy, and in the attack upon the Tripolitan gunboat fleet. Elevated to acting first lieutenant of the Enterprise in 1805, he some time afterward was transferred in the same capacity to the Syren, upon which vessel he returned to America. Early in 1807 he received a permanent appointment as lieutenant.

Part of the years 1807 and 1808 were passed by Macdonough as first lieutenant of the Wasp, in a voyage to England and return and on patrol duty along the Atlantic coast. Withdrawing from active duty in 1810, he returned to the service at the outbreak of the War of 1812, serving first as commander of the naval station at Portland, Me., and then being given command of the American fleet on Lake Champlain.

Arriving at Lake Champlain in October, 1812, he found that he would have to arm, equip, and supply his vessels, bringing guns, stores, and even crews to the inland waters from the seacoast. The season was so far advanced by the time that his fleet was ready for operations that he went into winter quarters at Shelburne, Vt.

During the summer of 1813 he lost two of his ships, and as a result the British gained superiority upon the lake. It was not until September that Macdonough, who in the previous July had attained the rank of master commandant, was able to strengthen his fleet sufficiently to force the enemy to retreat to Canadian waters.

The summer of 1814 found Macdonough's fleet superior to that of the British. By this time he had assembled 13 vessels, of which the 26-gun Saratoga, his flagship, was the most formidable. The British, however, rushed the construction of the 37-gun Confiance, which swung the advantage back to them.

Then came the decisive battle of Plattsburg, fought in the waters off that town on Sept. 11, 1814. An enemy land force of 11,000 troops under Gen. George Prevost had advanced to the vicinity of Plattsburg and was besieging the town, which was defended by only 1,500 troops. In this situation the British fleet under Commodore George Downie appeared on the scene. Downie had 16 vessels, against 14 under Macdonough's command. The American fleet's guns threw a greater weight of metal, but the British ships possessed more long-range guns.

Macdonough anchored his fleet in such a position as to force the enemy to come between him and land and to prevent him from fighting out of range of the American guns. In the first hour and a half of fighting both fleets suffered heavy damage. Macdonough, then by a surprise maneuver which he had prepared for in advance, presented the less damaged side of his flagship to the Confiance. Downie had been killed in the fight, and the British, with their strongest vessel unable to turn to meet the American maneuver, were compelled to surrender.

As a result of Macdonough's victory the British army retreated to Canada. Macdonough was officially thanked by congress and promoted to captain.

In 1818 he was given command of the frigate Guerriere, which joined the Mediterranean squadron after having convoyed to Russia the new American minister, G. W. Campbell. Macdonough's next command was the 74-gun Ohio. In 1824 he returned to the Mediterranean as squadron commander. When his health began to fail he gave up his command and started for his native land aboard the merchant ship Edwin, but death overtook him at sea 600 miles from the American coast on Nov. 10, 1825.

Hollywood.

THERE WAS no escalator along the road that led Ida Lupino to stardom and success in "The Hard Way."

Ida used to be called "Hollywood's dizziest blonde," but she, like many others, has undergone a complete transfiguration since she arrived here some years ago for the pre-announced purpose of playing the title rôle in "Alice in Wonderland." She didn't play it, incidentally, altho the changed Ida could undoubtedly handle the difficult rôle today.

Ida herself is the first to tell any one who dares ask that she is an entirely different person than she was when she made that first trek to Hollywood.

The change, in the making, cost her many heartaches, headaches, and much money. She didn't work for months while she was undergoing that introspection that made an actress out of a blonde playgirl.

Before this sudden realization that she was headed no place fast, Ida had been "going good" in Hollywood, she thought, and many others were inclined to agree. She had been made a "baby vamp" by the studio which then held her contract, and she merely had been living up to what she supposed was expected of her.

After her big decision to remake her life, her career, and herself Ida moved into a hilltop home over Hollywood, a tiny house from the windows of which she could look down on the film capital. She gave up the night life and gay parties she had encouraged and enjoyed. She just sat in that little high house most of the time for 18 months.

Of course she didn't sit in that house alone. She had a husband, Louis Hayward, who was introspective, moody, and filled with psychological problems. His career was going great guns, and he cautioned Ida to go gently with her career, wait for the right part. She listened, and it did something to her — something which Ida believes now to have been the best thing that ever happened. She emerged from this chrysalis less a butterfly than a hard-working young woman, ready and determined to pursue her career to its triumphant terminus—stardom.

In "High Sierra" both Ida Lupino and Humphrey Bogart added to their stature—in a movie that Paul Muni said wasn't good enough for him.

"I was a mess," Ida said with that frankness which endears her to all her friends. "I was sure I was a great actress. I could play all night and walk on the set in the morning and wow 'em with a lifted eyebrow. I thought I could—until one dark day when I started taking stock of myself. Then I retired."

When Ida Lupino was "Hollywood's dizziest blonde."

During that retirement she let her hair return to its natural shade, took off every ounce of surplus weight, put away the rouge and powder she'd been using with such a lavish hand. She turned down a weekly salary, on contract, for $1,750 a week, which had more than a year to run. Her studio pals told her she was nuts; her husband told her it was courage. Then after 18 months the remodeled Lupino went looking for a job.

It wasn't easy, but after many turndowns she was given a chance—not a big one, a very little chance, it seemed—to show what she could do. During her months off the screen she had gathered about her a small group of other ambitious but unsuccessful actors, and they read and wrote plays, talked shop, as Ida says, "till the crack of doom."

Two picture breaks gave Ida her chance after her self-imposed exile from our gay life. The first was "The Light That Failed," in which Ronnie Colman starred. She played Bessie in that. She pleaded for the rôle to Director William (Wild Bill) Wellman until he found it next to impossible to refuse her. How well she did is screen history.

Even before that Ida found a man who listened to her—Harry Cohn of Columbia. He heard her story of transformation first hand, and said, "Sure, I'll give you some work."

They weren't starring rôles, but good, meaty parts which helped a lot.

Then along came "They Drive by Night," with Humphrey Bogart, and the mad scene which quickly zoomed her into the ranks of those who can successfully portray heavy emotion on the screen.

It isn't every one who can make madness convincing, but Ida did. Some comparisons followed in the reviews, most of them favorable, which said that Ida had done what only Bette Davis was supposed to be able to do. These spurred her on, and soon she was asking for the same kind of parts that Bette was getting.

LOOKING AT HOLLYWOOD WITH HEDDA HOPPER

She played in "High Sierra," with Bogart again, the picture which Paul Muni said wasn't good enough for him, but which added something to the stature of both Ida and Humphrey. After that she worked with John Garfield, Thomas Mitchell, and others in "Out of the Fog." Only Ida didn't come "out of the fog." She stayed right in it for "Moontide."

After that what Ida likes to call her "off the bias face" looked straight into stardom—and it was hers. It is still hers in "The Hard Way."

By such devious routes has Ida climbed to and maintained her present standing. Always intense, always willing to work as she was once anxious to play, this slip of a young woman has earned her place.

Ida's most faithful adviser, Husband Louis Hayward, is in the army. While he's away she still continues to gather young, ambitious, and not too successful players about her in their home, helping them and getting help and inspiration from them. She's a multiple dynamo (if there is such a thing). She writes, composes music (some of it mighty good, too), discusses weighty subjects, and studies the history of the theater.

She has more ideas than a pomegranate has seeds. Sometimes they get into your hair, just as the seeds get in your teeth. But she keeps life interesting for herself, her husband, and her friends. There are no dull moments at any of Ida's gatherings. Everybody sits on the floor, and the loudest and most insistent voice gets and holds attention — and mostly that voice belongs to Ida.

Now that we've seen her do mad, neurotic, barren women, with hair slicked off the face and no makeup, she longs to get a comedy where she can wear Irene clothes, look pretty, and play-act a little silly.

"But," says she, "I've become my own Frankenstein, and it looks as tho I'm doomed to go thru life with a hacking cough, a pale face, and just one cylinder working before a final fadeout."

Well, that's the road she mapped out for herself, so she'll have to take it and like it—because we do, and she planned it that way.

YOUTH ON THE CAMPUS

By ELEANOR NANGLE

Denton, Tex.

TEXAS STATE COLLEGE FOR WOMEN is the largest residential college for girls in America. This year, because of war marriages and the lure of war work, its enrollment is down to a shade below 1,900, but some 600 members of the WAAC moved in early in March, so the beautiful 175-acre campus is as densely populated with the daughters of Eve as ever it was.

In all of Texas there are only two educational plants larger than T. S. C. W.'s, the University of Texas at Austin and Texas A. and M. at College Station. The latter regards T. S. C. W. as something of a sister school; the Aggies are imported willingly for all big T. S. C. W. parties, and reciprocate with enthusiasm by inviting the Denton girls down for the big dances that were a feature of pre-war life at A. and M.

The Aggies publicly interpret the Denton college's initials to stand for "Texas' Sweetest Collection of Women," and each year select the "Aggie Sweetheart" from among its many beauties. The honor went this year to Ruth Tilley of Shamrock, who was presented at half time of the biggest game of the year. Two hundred T. S. C. W. girls journeyed the 250 miles to College Station to take part in the movie "We've Never Been Licked," which was made at Texas A. and M. last fall. The heroine of that movie is, consistently, supposed to be a T. S. C. W. girl.

T. S. C. W. is no Adamless Eden on week-ends. The army flyers in training at the Teachers' college in Denton make a beeline for the campus then, as do many soldiers and officers from nearby camps. They find it swarming with pretty girls, who universally seem to maintain the happy balance between an easy air of good sportsmanship and complete femininity. They don't wear slacks on campus, nor do they smoke in the two big, cheerful dining halls or on the broad lawns. Until four years ago it was a uniform school, where all wore navy blue. Now bright sweaters and skirts or cotton dresses are the rule, and short socks have recently been permitted for general wear day and evening as a war-time necessity.

The campus at Denton is strikingly democratic. T. S. C. W. is, by eastern and midwestern standards, an inexpensive school, but wealth or the lack of it is no yardstick of popularity or leadership. There are many co-operative residence houses, and this year the problem of obtaining student help in the dining halls was neatly solved by appealing to the girls on a patriotic basis. They pitched in, rich and poor alike. And it is a T. S. C. W. custom not to use money; students sign chits almost everywhere on campus for their occasional purchases.

T. S. C. W. has many unique features: A college camp, eight miles away on Lake Dallas; a huge and handsome outdoor swimming pool in the rear of its union; its golf course, nine regulation holes and one for practice; its five-week summer school at Saltillo, Mexico, and its exquisite little Chapel in the Woods, an architectural gem in which all the art work, including 11 exquisite stained glass windows, lamps, altar pieces, and carved pews and doors were executed by students. It is a shrine to which many ex-students return to be married and is also being used now as a marriage chapel for men stationed in nearby camps and their brides from distant places.

Home economics is a popular course at Texas State College for Women, as are education, music, and art. And its journalism department is justifiably proud of the fact that the college weekly, Lass-O, has been winner seven years running of the national scholastic press all-American award!

By STANLEY JOHNSTON

AMERICAN Flying Fortresses and Liberator bombers in their raids from England over German-occupied territory in continental Europe frequently are forced to fight their way thru hundreds of Luftwaffe fighting planes, including those of the Focke-Wulf 190 type.

From North Africa come reports of encounters between American P38s (Lockheed Lightnings) and the most formidable German fighters, including the highly rated FW190s.

Altho the big bombers have been more than holding their own against the FW190s, and the P38s have proved masters of the situation in virtually every African dogfight in which the odds have not been too great against them, the Focke-Wulf 190 nevertheless is a remarkably well designed and well constructed fighting craft of the air.

Its designer, Kurt Tank, who also designed the Focke-Wulf Condor and the short-range FW189, placed special stress on creating a small fighter that could be turned out in numbers without any great problem of production. It is important that a fighter plane be small. The FW190 is amazingly compact and can be handled easily. Its loaded weight, in the A3 or early subtype, has been held to 8,580 pounds, its length is 29 feet 4 inches, its wing span 34 feet 5 inches, its gross wing area 203 square feet, and its fuel capacity 115 imperial gallons of gasoline. It carries 10 imperial gallons of oil. It has been found to be a very efficient all-around fighter with outstanding combat qualities, lightning responsiveness, quick-acting controls, highly developed maneuverability, and a good rate of climb—all valuable assets to the pilot for attack or defensive action.

The plane's service ceiling is about 37,000 feet, which is 3,000 feet less than that of the Me190E and Heinkel 113. The FW190's best fighting performance is given as between 11,000 and 24,000 feet. Above and below these heights its performance falls off. At 18,000 feet, with the engine developing 1,760 horsepower at 3,000 revolutions a minute, it reaches 375 miles an hour. For short one-minute bursts at 20,000 feet it will attain a maximum speed of 390 miles an hour. At 4,500 feet its normal speed, however, comes down to 326 miles an hour. Its rate of climb at 17,500 feet is given as 3,280 feet a minute, as compared with 3,050 feet a minute at 4,000 feet. It is reported to have the high stalling speed of about 100 miles an hour, which makes for hazardous landings, as was experienced when some of our designers, in going after high speed by the simple expedient of adding horsepower and consequently weight, pushed the stalling speed of their planes up to and above 100 miles an hour.

In their Messerschmitts and Heinkel 113s the Germans, like the British in their Spitfires and Hurricanes, use in-line liquid-cooled engines. Their success lies in the fact that these excellent and continually improved engines give the horsepower necessary for high speeds at high altitudes. Thus they were able to reach ceilings of 39,000 and 40,000 feet back in 1940, and since that time have gone and are still going higher.

It is of interest, therefore, to note that in building the FW190s the Nazis have used the air-cooled radial type engine. This B. M. W. (Bayerische Motoren Werke) 801D is a 14-cylinder two-row power plant, designed and built as one complete unit. (In their newest FW190s, as well as in some of their Dornier 217 bombers, they have an even later model of the B. M. W. radial type which is reported to be an 18-cylinder twin-row engine that gives 2,000 horsepower.)

Wing span—34 ft. 5 in.
Length—29 ft. 4 in.
Wing area—203 sq. ft. (gross).
Weight loaded—8,580 lbs.
Wing loading—42.26 lbs. a sq. ft.

Structure weight—2,750 lbs.
Engine and tanks—3,490 lbs.
Fuel (115 imperial gals.*)—830 lbs.
Oil (10 imperial gals.)—90 lbs.
Guns, ammunition, pilot, other military accessories—1,420 lbs.

*An imperial gallon equals 1.20094 U. S. gallons.

Air scoops, coolers, and superchargers of the FW190 fit snugly inside the cowling. By eliminating all external projections, which cause considerable drag at high speeds, the Nazis have greatly minimized the pull, which otherwise, together with the blunt entry of the radial engine, would waste power unnecessarily. It is generally assumed that the cleaner lines and sharp entry of in-line engines would give a horsepower saving of as much as 15 per cent over the same powered radial motors.

The over-all diameter of the engine is 50 inches, all of which is safely inclosed inside a cowling of 52 inches in diameter. Unlike the tubby, barrel-like appearance of the American air-cooled-engine-powered fighters, the FW190 appears sleek and streamlined without sacrificing any of its efficiency.

An innovation is the 32-inch 12-bladed magnesium alloy fan in front of the cylinders. It requires about 100 horsepower to drive it at takeoff, but absorbs no power directly once the forward speed is above 170 miles an hour, as it is then spun around by the air stream. The addition of this fan, in conjunction with the complicated system of baffles placed inside the cowling, assures cooling air reaching every part of the motor. So effective is this arrangement that the engine can be run on the ground without the possibility of overheating, unequal heating, or sooted-up plugs and other bugbears which affect some other air-cooled machines.

Like other German engines, this one functions without the use of a carburetor. It operates with an improved system of jets which introduce the fuel directly into the cylinders in the same manner as a Diesel engine. This fuel injector is reported to be made with as meticulous care and forethought as are all other parts of the plane. The engine can be speedily removed from its air frame by the loosening of screws from its special five-point attachment, and as it is one complete unit even to its own cooling fan, it can be transferred immediately to a similar five-point mounting on a bench and run there for repair purposes.

The 24-volt electrical system is said to be up to the usual German standard in its minutest detail. With the sole exception of the hydraulically operated constant-speed gear of the V. D. M. air screw and the wheel brakes, all else works electrically. One other outstanding feature which relieves the pilot from a host of settings is the kommandeur (master) control unit, which governs boost pressure, air screw pitch, automatic engagement of the supercharger, and mixture control. Besides saving the flyer from having to make various different settings, this mechanical master control provides against inexperienced handling, conserves time, and saves worry and man hours spent on repairs and breakages thru mishandling.

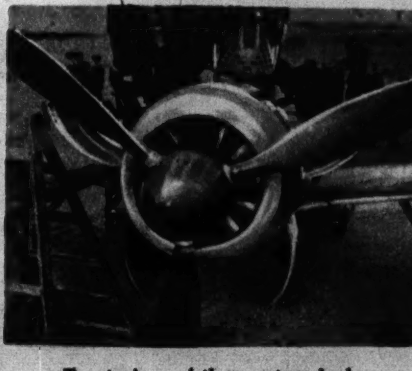
Part of the air frame is the one-piece wing, which, altho it makes repair more difficult, saves some 300 pounds in weight. The fuselage also is in one piece. No trimming tabs are provided, but small perforated adjustable plates are fitted to ailerons, elevators, and rudder. These must be adjusted on the ground. An adjustable tail plane allows change of trim while in flight, and this the British suggest is a source of possible weakness in a combat machine.

The undercarriage is better than any other seen with the exception of that of the American Mustang. But because of the difficulty in trimming it must not be let down when flying less than 120 miles an hour. Press-button control is provided for selection of position of the split flaps. For takeoff the flaps are set for 10 degrees of droop, and 60 degrees of droop is used for landing.

The small cockpit is excellently laid out and has a very complete set of instruments with conveniently small dials. Frictionless controls have been attained without balances of any sort. In landing, the last couple of inches of pull-back on the stick locks the tail wheel centrally. Ventilation is perfect. Draft and fumes have been virtually eliminated.

The cockpit cover, made in one piece of laminated type transparent Plexiglas, slides back completely by turning a handle in the cockpit, but it cannot be opened while the engine is being run up or while in flight. To bail out the pilot presses a button which explodes a small charge in the supporting tube, which in turn allows the hood to fly off.

The FW190 is well armed and can therefore pull harder punches than either the Me109FI, equipped with only one 20-mm. Mauser cannon and two machine guns, or the Me109F2, with one 15-mm. Mauser cannon and two Rheinmetall-Boersig machine guns. Its armament consists of two shell-firing high-velocity 20-mm. Mauser cannon fitted in the wing roots, which shoot thru the propeller arc. These are perhaps the first cannon to operate with an interrupter gear (for regulating the fire so as to prevent damage to the blades of the propeller), which slows their rate of fire from a possible 950 rounds a minute down to about 850 or less. Each of these two cannon carries 200 shells—enough for 17 seconds of continuous shooting.



Front view of the captured plane.

Two older model low-velocity 20-mm. Oerlikons are mounted in the wings of the plane. Their rate of uninterrupted fire is 450 rounds a minute, but they carry only 55-60 rounds, or a duration of fire of about 7½ seconds.

Two 7.92-mm. (.314-inch) Rheinmetall-Boersig machine guns, each loaded with 1,000 rounds, are set on top of the fuselage and shoot thru the propeller arc at the slow rate of only 600 bullets a minute. Thus the weight of fire of the two Mauser cannon (350 pounds of shells), the two Oerlikons (225 pounds of shells), and the two machine guns (35 pounds of bullets) is a total of 610 pounds of missiles a minute. This is considerable fire power for any fighter.

In addition this interceptor fighter can carry on short-range operations a single 550-pound bomb (or up to this weight in smaller missiles) in slings under the fuselage. The bomb release is electrically operated, as are the arms. Rounds fired by the guns are automatically recorded on a small disk. Inside the wind screen is a small, well perfected reflector gun sight. The nose ring of the engine cowling is of 5-mm. steel and the second portion of the cowling of 3-mm. steel. The acutely sloped (but not as steep as the Me109F"s) glass front of the cockpit consists of 2¼-inch bulletproof glass. A 14-mm. (.55-inch) thick armor plate protects the back of the pilot's head, and his back is protected by a 8-mm (.315-inch) thick bulkhead. This armor gives excellent protection against light machine gun bullets, tho of course it is vulnerable to cannon and the .50-caliber machine gun of American bombers and fighters.

The fuel tanks are placed inside the fuselage. One, which carries 232 liters or 51 imperial gallons, is placed under the seat, and the second, carrying 292 liters, or 64 imperial gallons, behind it. Both are self-sealing. An extra spare fuel tank can be fitted beneath the fuselage instead of the 550-pound bomb. Oil tank and oil cooler are armor-covered.

REVEALS THE HIDDEN BEAUTY IN YOUR HAIR

THERE ARE SUCH THINGS

By MAUREEN DALY
(Author of "Seventeenth Summer.")

Maureen Daly

A GIRL that's true—there are such things. A girl who will write to her soldier every day, think of him every night, and keep his snapshot stuck in the frame of her bedroom mirror. A girl with clean, shiny hair who still takes the bus to work every morning, stays at home three nights a week, listens to Jack Benny on Sundays, and never misses a news broadcast. A girl who likes white shirtwaist blouses, looks wonderful in black, and is still young enough to wear a small bow in her hair and occasionally ankle socks and flat-heeled shoes. The kind of a girl who got good grades in school, keeps her own bedroom neat, and is the smoothest dancer this side of Rita Hayworth. The kind of a girl who is a good sport and a good cook; who likes cokes and hamburgers and likes you because you like them . . . . there really are such things. And it's a wonderful thing to think about when you are a long, long way from home.

The war has made a lot of changes in all lives and has created special problems for those girls who in the growing-up process hadn't reckoned on anything like this. Those girls whose high school days were a series of dances, coke dates, and just having fun. They were the good-natured girls who laughed a lot, read enough, and were particular about the kind of clothes they wore and how they wore them. They were typically normal American girls.

They were the kind who wanted to work a few years and then get married and have a house where they could paint the inside of the kitchen cupboards red, grow chives in a flower pot on the window sill, and hang fluffy white curtains at the bedroom windows. They were the girls whose idea of ultimate happiness was something soft and cuddly to wrap in a pink baby blanket. But there have been a lot of changes made.

Some of the girls hadn't yet had time to meet the right fellow, and some had met him just in time to have him whisked off to camp or sent overseas. And they've been good sports about it. No one is complaining. These same girls are now buying war stamps, reading about point rationing, having their old shoes reheeled, and looking as smartly groomed as ever. They aren't complaining about gas rationing and are consistently patient and cheerful about crowded buses and late trains. They have adjusted themselves to life without daily phone calls, evening dresses, hands to hold, and dates on Saturday night.

Even tho the men are few or far away, they haven't lowered themselves or their dating standards. They have known some one wonderful—and the memories are still warm enough to keep them from trying to crowd in a little extra loving on pick-up dates or from hanging around bars by themselves, looking lovely but lonely. Those girls have something to wait for, and they are waiting.

They are using this time to hasten the end of the war and to make themselves more ready for the big day. Girls are getting to know one another better. There is consolation and a feeling of companionship in just talking about the fellows who are gone. By thinking about them and mulling over old memories, girls get to know them better.

With more evenings at home, girls are spending more time reading, more time listening to the radio, and more time appreciating their families. They are profiting by the dating letup. Instead of brooding and putting all their thoughts in a purple spotlight, they are keeping themselves cheerful and keeping up two spirits with one letter by writing to their soldier every day. Without letting up on energies needed right now, they can take a mental pot shot at the future, realizing more than ever how much will depend on them when the Johnnies come marching home.

And there really are such things. Girls as pretty as ever, as nice as ever, and as much fun as ever, who will be here when the boys come back. Those girls know what they are waiting for. And it's a wonderful thing to think about when you are a long, long way from home.

The entire first page of this section is devoted to color drawings of new war work uniforms being worn by women in industry.

By WALTER SIMMONS

WITH women stepping into men's jobs at increasing speed, safety engineers have been having horrendous nightmares. They see pretty heads drawn into revolving machinery by the hair, skirts caught by rotating shafts, feminine toes crushed by dropped wrenches. These are not pretty thoughts to consider. But they have led to the development of vital new styles—uniforms behind the lines—for women in war industry.

At Western Electric's Hawthorne plant in Chicago 52 per cent of employés are now women. A year ago more than two-thirds of the personnel was masculine. L. I. Shaw, head of the safety and hazard division, and D. A. Moore, safety and health chief, expected trouble when they imposed standard safety rules on the new employés. But surprisingly there was none.

"We'll wear anything that's good looking," Shaw and Moore were told. Turbans for the hair met with unexpected favor. "They're cooler—keep the hair off the back of our necks." Good looking safety shoes with plastic toe boxes were sold by the company at cost—and were a big success. Western Electric pioneered in this field. Women welders accepted heavy sweatshirts (which don't catch fire from sparks) without a murmur. Sleeveless slack suits became standard in danger departments.

Allis-Chalmers in Milwaukee decided its women employés needed work garments as practical as the man's great American overall. Its experts designed four trouser type suits now on sale thruout the nation. Feminine workers at the Sperry Gyroscope company laid down 31 specifications for a suggested "defense-all."

Trousers "just long enough to cover and still show our ankles," creases stitched in, and no pockets "because they make hips look larger," were some of the requests. President Reginald E. Gillmor called in Stylist Vera Maxwell, who designed a bright blue slack suit. Lily Daché, consulted as to safety headgear, produced a red and blue mesh turban which women workers were proud to wear. It has a flattering coronet front and full snood back, and is tied with a bright cherry red ribbon.

There is no general agreement among experts as to exactly what women should wear to make arms. But a few plain facts stand out.

Electrical attraction draws long hair into machinery. This is a relatively new safety problem for industry, since male workers could always be told to "get a haircut." Safety headgear must be able to hold every hair confined, it must be light, noninflammable, washable, and "air conditioned" if possible.

New turbans and industrial caps meet all these specifications—and they're chic besides.

At Western Electric one of Shaw's pet peeves is to see a woman worker with front hair protruding from turban or cap. He insists on every hair being covered for safety's sake. Shaw also prefers turbans made of light material which will tear if caught. Women agree, explaining that light material keeps the hair from getting "musty."

Safety experts and stylists have gone to the mat and come up with some general conclusions about industrial clothing for women. They agree that it must be:

Comfortable, serviceable, washable, with short sleeves, no cuffs; close fitting necks; deep armholes; action shoulders; extra fullness in the back; tucked in shirts; no outside jackets; sewed in belts; nonmetal fastenings; fly type closings; nonrestricting waistlines; inserted front pockets; reinforced back carrying pockets; tapered trousers, no cuffs; socks or stockings for leg protection.

Many women workers are more particular about a trim silhouette effect than anything else. They want narrow collars and prefer high set change pockets.

Short sleeves are virtually universal except where long sleeves are required for protection. At the Chicago plant of Bauer & Black, manufacturing surgical dressings and supplies, Dorothea Weichelt, personnel director, told of the use of long sleeves by women in one department to save them from ink spashes in a printing operation. But in the carding room and other departments short sleeves were required.

Rolled up cuffs on shirts or trousers are considered most dangerous of all, for they will not tear when caught in machinery. Some styles of slacks are tapered in at the bottom for safety's sake.

In some operations slacks are not required. Women doing table work or simple machine operations at Bauer & Black wear the white and green dress pictured on the first page of this section. Features are short sleeves, straight skirt, and neckline attractive to all wearers.

Just below and to the left is the peppery gray slack suit worn in Bauer & Black operations where there is a chance of ink or grease spattering the clothing. The material is heavy. Ankle and wrist cuffs are tight fitting.

With 6,000,000 women scheduled for war industry jobs by the end of 1943, safe shoes have caused much concern. High heels are definitely out. Open toes are hazardous anywhere, because nails, scrap metal and other sharp objects have an unfortunate habit of striking the toe opening first. The toe is also a splendid target for dropped tools and knives.

Thin soled, narrow toed, and wornout shoes with runover heels are obvious hazards. The new safety shoes for women usually are not built to withstand the 1,200 pounds of crushing pressure common to some men's models, but their plastic or fiber toe boxes are safe enough for almost all eventualities. Allis-Chalmers, which calls them "foot armor," encourages their use by paying $1 toward the cost of each pair purchased by employés.

Looking at safety in industry as simple "good housekeeping," the war time feminine personnel has been quick to adopt the new costumes in thousands of plants.

"These girls," say the engineers, "aren't asking for any favors. Taking men's places, they feel it's a duty to dress like the men they replace. A few even insist on wearing men's overalls.

"But the safe new 'uniforms'—practical and at the same time good looking—have met with general favor. The girls are proud to wear them to work—and are we glad!"

IF YOU exchange some of your blue stamps for canned cherries, be certain you get the most out of that can of tart red fruit. One can (No. 2 size) should serve three purposes: It could make a loaf of cherry bread and an upside-down cake, plus sauce (from the juice) for a pudding. To use an entire can in a cherry pie would be an awful extravagance!

CHERRY BREAD
(One loaf)

- ⅓ cup shortening
- ¼ cup sugar
- ¾ cup corn sirup
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup chopped cherries
- 2 cups sifted enriched flour
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 3 teaspoons baking powder
- 1 cup chopped nuts (may be omitted)

Cream sugar and shortening until light. Add corn sirup gradually, mixing thoroly. Beat eggs until light and add to creamed mixture. Add cherries. Sift flour, salt, and baking powder together and add to cherry mixture. Add nuts. Bake in a greased loaf pan in a 375 degree oven for 1½ hours.

Use this bread to make tea sandwiches and serve it to guests with tea, coffee, or wine, or cereal beverage—whatever drink you can provide most easily. Cherry bread and something to drink are all that will be required in the way of refreshment for any kind of afternoon or evening informal entertainment.

Here's a way to stretch a pound of meat with plentiful corn flakes to make an economical and flavorful dish:

SWEDISH MEAT BALLS
(Serves six)

- 1 pound ground beef
- 2 eggs
- 2 tablespoons minced onion
- 1 teaspoon salt
- ⅛ teaspoon pepper
- 1¼ cups milk
- 4 cups corn flakes
- 3 tablespoons fat
- 1 cup milk
- 1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Mix meat, eggs, onion, and seasonings. Add 1¼ cups milk and the corn flakes, which have been rolled to fine crumbs. Shape into balls and fry slowly in drippings, turning once. Cook about 30 minutes. Remove from pan. Stir the 1 cup milk into the drippings, heat, add salt to taste and parsley. Pour over meat balls.

Serve meat balls like these with a fresh green vegetable such as peas or broccoli and baked potato. A good salad might be apple, celery, and nut, with boiled salad dressing sweetened with a little sugar or honey and thinned with cream or milk. Hot whole wheat rolls or homemade Swedish rye bread, a simple dessert, and coffee would complete the meal.

For whole wheat roll and rye bread recipes see "Better Homemade Breads and Rolls," a fat book of formulas for all kinds of yeast and baking powder rolls, coffee cakes, and breads. It is available at either of the Tribune Public Service Offices, Tribune Tower lobby or 1 South Dearborn street in the loop. Cost is 20 cents. The booklet will be mailed for 23 cents in stamps. WE LAUGHED AT MODERN ART

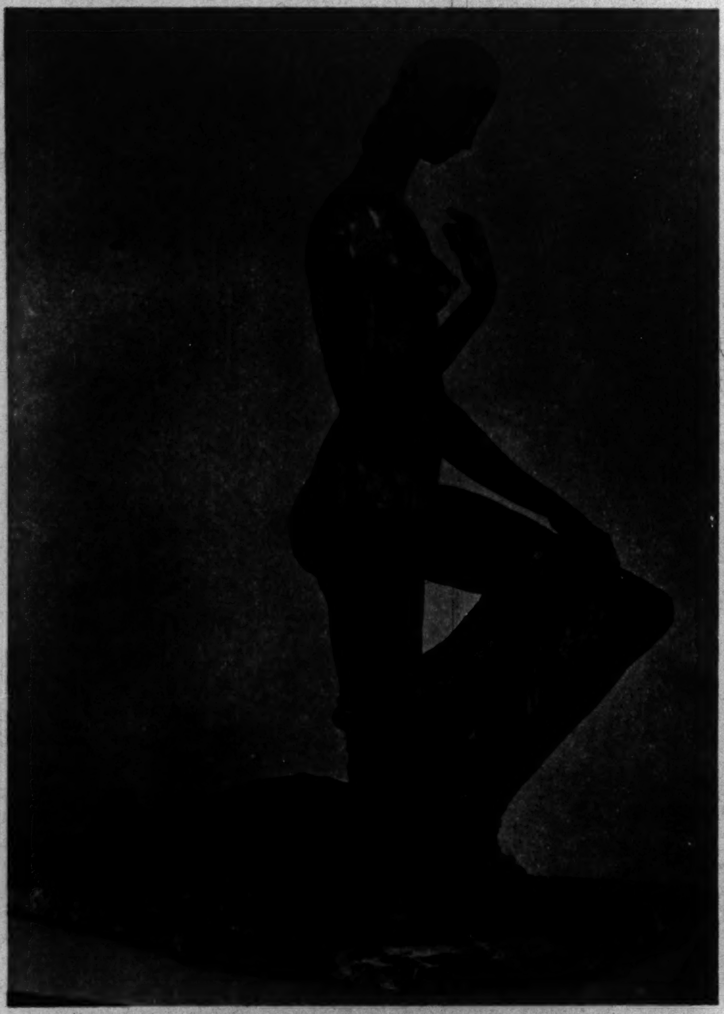
THIRTY YEARS AGO!



"The Kneeling Woman," by Lehmbruck (now considered "poetic," "unworldly," "rarer than reality," and "almost classically serene"), was at first laughed at as so much gaunt distortion. "If she'd only stand up," was the comment, "you'd see what a gawk she is."

When the first big exhibition of modern art was held in America 30 years ago, paintings by self-taught artists—such as this landscape by Henri Rousseau—were taken to be just plain clumsy jobs. Today such artists are hailed as "uncorrupted intelligences" and are highly respected.

Of this picture by Derain most people said: "Well, it's not as crazy as the others; at least you can tell what he's painting." At present the picture is treasured for its "grandeur of design." A mere handful recognized that then.

By DELOS AVERY

LESSON No. 1 in what some scoffers still call "the double-talk of art"—bristling with such words as "cubism," "abstractism," "post-impressionism," "futurism," and more recently "surrealism" — was presented to some 250,000 bewildered people at the Art Institute of Chicago almost exactly 30 years ago, in the brief period between March 24 and April 16, 1913.

Old-timers at the institute never have forgotten, never can forget, their hectic experience with the throngs of men, women and children who came to pack the galleries and to register their thousand and one assorted reactions as they gazed at the paintings and sculptures of such artists as Picasso, Matisse, Cezanne, Van Gogh, Gauguin, Redon, Rousseau, Zak, Picabia, Derain, Kandinsky.

Rich men, poor men, professors, students, clubwomen, shopgirls, brokers, butchers, bootblacks, plumbers, musicians, poets, policemen, people from Lake Forest, from Maxwell street, from the universities, from back of the yards and from suburbs and villages within a radius of a hundred miles and more came by train, by street car, by elevated, by limousine, and on foot.

They shoved and elbowed each other; they overwhelmed the regular institute guards so that police reënforcements had to be summoned.

And—aside from a microscopic minority of "intellectuals"—who either understood or pretended to understand—the crowd's answer to the exhibition was about three-fourths laughter and one-fourth wrath.

"Nude Descending a Staircase," a painting by Marcel Duchamp, cubist and one of the founders of the "surrealist" school, received more attention than all the rest of the show because the crowd considered it to be the most incomprehensible of all.

"It's hanging upside down—I'm sure it must be," one woman said after giving the canvas a long inspection thru a lorgnette.

"Either that or the fellow stood on his head to paint it," agreed her companion, a physician.

"I don't see no nude," muttered a truck driver. "Looks more like an explosion in a shingle factory to me."

And "Explosion in a Shingle Factory" became the picture's unofficial title, accepted by the newspapers, which sent not only their professional critics but also their police reporters to the exhibition.

Day after day the crowds gathered about Duchamp's "invisible nude," staring at the pattern of straight lines and angles and planes, striving to make the image "come thru." Eventually they were helped by Arthur Jerome Eddy, Chicago connoisseur, who used a photograph of the painting and picked out the outline of the figure. She was there all right, and she was nude, and she was really on a stairway, with one foot on a step and the other approaching the step below.

Not only was she there but she was there in multiple, like a series of motion pictures overlapping, so that her figure appeared over and over on a series of steps leading down from the upper left to the lower right. The Chicago Tribune, eager to assist its readers, published the Eddy diagram and after that it was easy for everybody to "get" what the artist was presenting.

At left: Entitled "Nude Descending the Stair," this cubist painting by Duchamp was the hit of the show. Americans thought it a huge joke. One critic described it as a "shifting of a gigantic pack of cards." Another called it "an explosion in a shingle factory."

Eddy, a world known collector, bought many of the pictures in the show and later bequeathed some of them to the institute, where a few of them are still hanging, while others are stored away at present, to be brought out occasionally when there is a revival of public demand. Duchamp's nude, however, is not at the institute, but is reported to be privately owned in Hollywood. Reproductions of it have appeared in many books and art magazines.

It was not long after the Chicago show that Duchamp announced he would paint no more. His reason, he explained, was not the public derision which his work had evoked but rather the "ignorant admiration." He could stand "ignorant blame," not "ignorant praise." For some years, in the early '20s, he devoted himself to chess in Greenwich village, where he haunted the Marshall Chess club and became a pal of its founder, then champion of the United States.

Duchamp took his surrealism into chess, too, specializing in a variation of the game in which the two players make their moves without either knowing what move his opponent has made. It sounds impossible, but it is a real game, played on three boards, one for White, one for Black, and the third for the referee, who keeps track of the moves on both sides and warns any player who attempts to make an illegal move. Duchamp became so expert in "learning the possible from the impossible" that he could sometimes foresee a whole series of moves leading to victory and could "announce mate in four moves." The game has a name, "kriegspiel," and is still popular.

One of the pictures in the exhibition was called "Woman and Mustard Pot," by Pablo Picasso. Picasso is now one of the most famous artists in the world, and it was only a year or so ago that a special showing of his works at the institute covered more wall space than any other one-man show, it is said, ever commanded. But 30 years ago the reporters—if not the critics — were unimpressed.

The Tribune's critic, Harriet Monroe, had her doubts about the merits of the show as a whole, but she was cautious, studiously fair, and she did find things to praise as well as others to condemn. Writing of a landscape by Cezanne, she gave him credit for "plucking the heart out of his subject and discarding the rest." Her phrase for Gauguin was "weird fascination," but one of his portraits moved her to suspect that he had been "inspired by a totem pole." Matisse to her was "an intolerably egoistic bore." And she found the cubists in general to be "too literary," altho she dutifully conceded that their works "as experiment" . . . might represent "the first dim gropings toward an art of pure color which may delight the 21st century as symphonic music delights us. . . ."

And, speaking of music, The Tribune's music critic, Glenn Dillard Gunn, described the cubists as "copy-cats . . . trying to do with line and color what has often been done with melody and harmony." But Dr. Gunn lived to see music itself let down the bars to surrealism in the forms of jazz, "jive," "boogie-woogie," and the antics of the "jitterbug."

The attitude of city editors toward innovations in art 30 years ago was—and perhaps still is—more flippant than reverent. And so it must be recorded that The Tribune printed side by side a picture by Matisse and another made by one "King Manuel," inmate of an insane asylum, and challenged readers to guess which was the work of the madman.

This recalls one of the frequently quoted sayings of Salvadore Dali, at present the most famous of surrealists.

"The only difference between me and a madman," he said, "is that I am not mad."

The sponsor of the show of 30 years ago was the Association of American Painters and Sculptors, whose president, Arthur B. Davies, insisted that the purpose was neither propaganda nor controversy.

"Any individual expression of opinion contrary to the above," he said, "is at variance with the official resolution of this association." It was like a modern radio sponsor disclaiming the opinions of a political commentator.

One thing more should be noted. Just 21 years after the famous show at the institute the University of Chicago Press published a brochure by Edward F. Rothschild under the heavy title of "The Meaning of Unintelligibility in Modern Art." After pointing out that "the idiom of modern art is predominantly unintelligible," the writer says:

"The layman does not see reproduced before his eyes the shapes and textures of things he has learned from practical experience, and he is ready to condemn as soon as he sees a bird that couldn't sing or a tree that couldn't grow. What he fails to realize is that this factor of unintelligibility is as much a part of the artist's necessary means of presentation as are the pigments he employs."

A B C D E F
G H I J K L
M N O P Q R
S T U V W
X Y Z.

"It is in French," said Rothschild, "but you don't have to know French to read it."

Of course the same "poem" could have been entitled "Complete Works of William Shakespeare."

Matisse was the first modernist to lean toward abstract designs, but his purpose went unnoticed. His pictures were booed. Today there are hundreds of abstract artists, the majority of them far more abstract than Matisse ever dreamed of being.

In this bronze head Picasso was trying to produce a form in geometry—solid geometry, with facets like a jewel. The public scoffed.

GRAPHIC LITTLE THEATER presents 'REVEILLE with BEVERLY'

1 Beverly Ross is on the air for the first time—doing a brief commercial. Her brother (Larry Parks), sister (Adele Mara), and mother and father (Barbara Brown and Douglas Leavitt) think she's a little slap-happy.

2 But when Beverly takes over an early morning recording broadcast she plays popular tunes exclusively, fills in with cute chatter, and soon becomes the sweetheart of the army camps.

3 Two who are especially captivated are wealthy Barry Lang (William Wright) and his chauffeur, Andy Adams (Dick Purcell). They finally meet Beverly (Ann Miller) thru her brother—but switch names.

4 On a visit to their camp Beverly discovers the switch, and when she threatens to expose them Barry and Andy come down with "mumps."

5 They are afraid Beverly is hurt by their masquerade. But all is forgotten when a sudden order comes for troops to move, in the middle of her broadcast. Beverly finishes before an empty house, to prevent any news of the troops' departure leaking out over the air, and Barry and Andy depart with her blessing. (THE END)

PLASTICS and MAGNESIUM —MIRACLES of CHEMISTRY

This is the second of three articles on the accomplishments of the Dow Chemical company, which by the nature of its products is contributing so vitally toward winning the war and at the same time sowing the seeds of vast industrial expansion after the war. The first article dealt largely with the development of the company and its entrance into the field of plastics.

By PHILIP HAMPSON

EVER SINCE its founding in the late 1880s at Midland, Mich., the $153,000,000 Dow Chemical company has been expanding its activities in the direction of new substances. Plastics, magnesium, and Thiokol, a rubberlike synthetic, are important contributions of this firm.

Among the plastics, Ethocel and Styron have been on the market five or six years. Saran, the baby of the Dow plastics now on the market, has been out for two years, but only within the last year has it become important. Its future appears the brightest of any of the three. The Dow company itself does not to any great extent process the plastics it makes, but supplies the plastics as basic raw materials from which other manufacturers process an endless variety of products.

Ethocel and Styron are supplied to the fabricators in a granule form. In addition Ethocel is available almost in powder form and also in a semifinished state in the form of sheets. Saran comes in the form of a powder or pellet.

Ethocel is manufactured from cellulose (made from wood), brine (salt), and ethyl alcohol (a petroleum derivative). Its formal name is ethyl cellulose. Ethocel is made in several types, each being designed for specific purposes. It is a highly diversified material which can be made into moldings, extrusions, lacquers, and a variety of other things. Moldings may be machined by tools and methods used for handling wood, soft metals, or other soft plastics.

A type of Ethocel recently placed on the market was developed especially for toughness and shock resistance at sub-zero temperatures. It is said that abrupt changes from high temperatures and humidity to low temperature and low humidity do not cause cracking in this type of Ethocel. These virtues are especially desirable in war material which must see service under diverse and severe weather conditions.

Use of Ethocel at the moment is largely for military purposes. Among the items made from it are microphone parts, flashlight housings, nozzles, and numerous items the nature of which cannot be disclosed. It is rolled into transparent or colored sheetings out of which can be made containers for food and numerous other items. The sheeting can be used for many purposes where transparency is required. Available in a wide range of thicknesses, the sheeting also may be opaque or colored.

It is said that the electrical properties, moisture resistance, and general toughness of Ethocel lend it to use in electrical insulations, cable coatings, and for various nonstructural applications.

Then there is Styron, the formal name of which is polystyrene. It is a crystal clear plastic of many uses. It is an offspring of coal thru benzene and of petroleum thru styrene. Benzene and styrene are the basic materials from which it is made. Because of the styrene it becomes related to rubber production, for styrene is one of the most important constituents of the Buna S type of synthetic rubber. Buna S rubber to date is said to be the most satisfactory of the synthetics for the complete manufacture of automobile tires.

Tubing made of Saran, amazing plastic created by Dow.

Styron is a plastic which may trace its ancestry back more than 100 years. Styrene in simple form was first isolated in 1831. Its development took place thru polymerization. (In polymerization the molecules in a material are rearranged—two or more molecules being united—to make another compound having the same elements in the same proportions, but a higher molecular weight and different physical properties.)

Patents granted to Dr. F. E. Matthews in London in 1911 brought to light the possibilities of polymerized styrene and the product went into widespread use in Europe for molding material.

Eventually Dow took it up and placed it in the hands of its research staff. Years were spent in getting rid of the "bugs" and in reducing manufacturing costs.

Properties of Styron include chemical resistance, water resistance, high impact strength at low temperatures, clearness, and ease with which it can be molded. Especially important are the electrical properties—it is said to be about a 100 per cent nonconductor of electricity—hence its value as an insulator. It is now being used in radio. W. C. Goggin of the company's staff says Styron is certain to have a big use when television comes into its own after the war.

Styron is said to be especially useful because it lends itself to the manufacture of vast numbers of identical objects. Because of its resistance to chemicals it is now being used for medical equipment, analytical laboratory equipment, liquor pourers, and many other items. The airplane industry uses it for instrument parts and panels because of its light weight.

The high index of refraction and its clarity make Styron useful for the manufacture of indirectly lighted instruments and display and for molded optical parts. It is used for costume jewelry and synthetic jewels.

An interesting use, demonstrated during a recent trip to the Dow plant, is a battery case (a typical automobile battery) made of Styron which makes it possible to determine visually the condition of the battery. The Styron case, of course, is transparent. At the front of the battery are three small balls running up and down in channels—transparent like the rest of the battery case. The position of the balls in their channels indicates whether the battery is charged or uncharged.

We come now to Saran, the amazing baby of the Dow family, which answers to the formal name, vinylidene chloride. This is the most versatile of the Dow plastics. Saran already has stepped into the breech to save situations created by shortages of critical materials such as nickel, aluminum, stainless steel, and rubber.

Said the Dow company in introducing it recently:

"A remarkable new plastic is ready for the job ahead, a powerful stimulant for the industrial genius of America. The door to tomorrow is open."

The basic raw materials from which Saran is made are petroleum and brine, Dow's "good old salt water." Its immediate constituents are ethylene, made by cracking petroleum, and chlorine, made by electrolysis of the brine. The raw materials are put thru a polymerization process to make the plastic.

Saran as a raw material for fabricators can be molded, extruded, rolled into sheets or films, made into fibers, or processed in other ways. It is relatively expensive as yet, but as production increases Dow expects costs to go down.

It would be almost impossible to list the many uses to which this amazing material can be put. To name a few widely diversified uses; it may be made into pipe which replaces cast iron, it may be woven into bolting cloth for sifting flour which takes the place of silk, it may be made into an ordinary window screen, it may appear as the upper part of women's shoes, or as a fisherman's line. It may be used as a protective covering in the shipment of machine guns, replacing grease.

As a filament it may be used to take the place of imported natural raw materials such as hemp, reed, rattan, horsehair, linen, and others. It may be woven into fabrics of many types. One interesting use is as an upholstery fabric for seat covering. It is well suited for automobile upholstery because it can be cleaned easily with a damp cloth. It can be used to make draperies for the home. Who knows but some day it may be used for dress fabric, a fabric which could be cleaned in a jiffy with a wet cloth.

Possibly one of the most interesting uses of Saran by an industry beset by war shortages in many of its essential materials has been for pipe and tube, replacing iron and copper and other materials. The following statement by C. B. Branch and D. L. Gibb of the Dow staff indicates the importance of pipe and tubing to modern civilization:

"It has been said that the machine age began with the invention of the wheel, but certainly the wheel is little more essential to the whole structure of modern life than the tube. Man depends on some form of hollow conductor for the delivery of food and drink, for heat, light, transportation, and sanitation. Destroy tubing and men would be grounded, cities would be deserted, industries would perish, transportation would revert to the horse and buggy, and the wheel could fulfill only its most primitive functions. Obvious as this may be when brought to mind, it is, nevertheless, true that these facts are seldom, if ever, considered by most of us.

"It is not strange then that a reduction in the amount of tubing available for civilian use should present serious problems to innumerable persons and industries; nor that a new plastic tubing capable of replacing metal should be a matter of great general interest."

Saran tubing is now being produced commercially by a number of licensed fabricators thruout the country. It is produced in seamless, continuous lengths and is available in sizes ⅛ inch to ¾ inch diameter.

Saran tubing may be joined by some of the same types of connectors commonly used with metal tubings. These include flared, compression, welded, and flanged fittings, also made of Saran. Saran tubing is being used to replace strategic materials such as copper, nickel, stainless steel and rubber for the transmission of gases, liquids, and suspension in the general chemical, air conditioning, plumbing, process control equipment, food, and transportation industries.

In brief, Saran tubing is described as tough but flexible, capable of withstanding freezing and accomodating high and low pressures, as being able to heat up to 175 degrees Fahrenheit, and as noncorrosive and nonsealing. One of its outstanding characteristics is resistance to chemicals and solvents.

Saran pipe, which already has been adopted by a gas utility company unable to get cast iron pipe, comes in sizes ranging from ½ inch to 2 inches, with larger sizes being in the offing. Weight of the pipe is said to be approximately one-fourth that of comparable sizes of iron pipe. The Saran pipe can be threaded or welded by standard methods. Standard welded fittings are easily fabricated and standard flanges are available.

Also interesting, in view of the metal shortages, are Saran window screens. Saran screens are not attacked by sulphur fumes found in the coal smoke in industrial cities or by salt atmosphere along the seaboards.

Metallic magnesium and its various alloys, which are among the foremost products of the Dow Chemical company, represent a family of metals that is of extreme importance in peace and in war. One pound of Dowmetal, the trade name of magnesium alloys turned out by the company, is roughly the equiva-

MOSTLY ABOUT DOGS

Joan Carroll, youthful motion picture actress, and her pet collie.

ABOUT the most useful words that the average house dog should learn at an early age are "come on" (or just "come") and the word "no". The first command is very important because it gives the owner control over his dog when off a leash. The second is the word that corrects and shows displeasure to the puppy or grown dog which is doing something that it shouldn't do around the house or in the street.

If the dog owner starts early and knows how to use the correct tone of voice to praise or register displeasure when speaking to his dog the word "no" is invaluable in the dog's vocabulary. It can be used to keep a dog from doing what might get him in trouble and to help him learn his house manners.

We have heard trainers use two other words or phrases which convey the same meaning as the word "no." Martin Hogan, noted gun dog trainer, is partial to the phrase "leave it." Suppose a dog stops to putter around while in the field or is about to stick his nose into a waste basket in the kitchen, or do something else that isn't in the book of canine etiquet. If he has been taught the phrase "leave it" and (equally important) the tone of voice in which it is said, the dog literally does "leave it." Another synonym that many trainers use is "phooey." To a well trained dog "phooey" means "stop it—quit it—behave yourself—shame on you."

All of our dogs know the meaning of the word "no." In fact, we have one dog at home that considers itself all but chastised if we repeat the word

The command "come" or "come on" is even more important for a dog to learn quickly, because no owner can control his dog anywhere unless the pet will come when he is told to. When a pet is taken for exercise and allowed to run off a leash, unless it comes on a whistle command (in our estimation the greatest pleasure in dog control), or when it hears the verbal command, there usually is nothing but trouble and annoyance for the owner. As far as our pleasure of dog ownership is concerned, we never want to own another dog that hasn't been taught to respond to a whistle. It's the only easy way to handle or control a dog not on a leash.

In any simple training of the dog these points should be kept in mind: A dog's mind tires easily when it's being taught anything. Several short lessons are better than one long one. Very young puppies are not too easy to teach. They may learn their house manners when under 3 months of age, but we doubt if it is an accomplishment due to the high intellectual rating of the pup. We believe it's more instinctive than anything else, because dogs naturally are clean. On the other hand, you don't have to wait until the dog is grown to teach it obedience.

Dogs have their limitations in learning things, but so do owners when they try to educate their dogs. Impatience, indulgence, and leniency are often the worst faults in all of us owners. The impatient owner commonly doesn't give the dog a decent break.

In the first place, an owner may ascribe human intelligence to a dog and then get angry at it because it doesn't learn something quickly or respond to a lot of words the dog doesn't know. All too frequently the owner doesn't know even the rudiments of a training method, yet he will get out of patience with the dog because the latter doesn't know what to do. Whipping a dog that's trying to learn and can't because of the owner's shortcomings may ruin the poor animal by cowing it.

Dogs certainly must enjoy the extremely lenient owners who attempt to play the rôle of teacher. Such an owner gives a command in anything but a stern voice, does a little coaxing which accomplishes nothing with a pet that is smart and knows all the answers, and then the dog mutters, "So what?" under his breath and does just what he pleases. The result is that the dog gets more independent every day, may snarl when ordered to do something, and eventually runs the house. Unfortunately, dogs are not very well qualified for such executive positions.

KNOW YOUR CAMERA

By ANDREW B. HECHT, Ph. D.

FOR DYNAMIC pictures that catch the eye and hold it, shoot from extremely high or low camera angles. We all are accustomed to seeing things from the level of our own eyes. When we come across a photograph taken from the ground or from high in the air we stop and look again. Familiar objects take on new interest when viewed from an unaccustomed angle. A sprinkling of angle shots will add spice to any picture collection.

Any camera will take extreme angle shots. The only trick is to select the proper angle for the subject that you want to show and to find a means of getting it. You may have to climb a post or lie flat on the ground, but if it is unusual pictures that you want the results will make up for this effort.

Making angle shots is something that can't be done half way. If the camera is held only slightly above or below the normal level the resulting picture is sure to look like a slight mistake was made. If the angle is extreme it attracts attention at once and there is no room for questioning what the photographer wanted to do.

High angles make things seem shorter. Low angles make them seem taller. Both emphasize the parts of the subject matter that are nearest the camera. This explains the publicity agent's consistent use of low-angle bathing beauty pictures as attention getters.

Extreme camera angles create distortion of subject matter. One of the first rules for ordinary photography is to keep the camera level, but this rule is broken for every angle shot. Photograph a short girl from a low angle and she will seem tall. Photograph a tall building from a low angle and it will seem taller still. Distortion will make the girl's legs seem longer and will make the building appear to lean back against the sky. This might not be desirable if you were looking for straight "record" pictures, but for attention getters it is just the thing.

Even in portraiture camera angles have their place. When the camera is held low the strength of the chin is brought out. When it is high the forehead is broadened. Use care in selecting unusual camera angles in portraiture. If they are too extreme a caricature may result. This is all to the good if you are out for humorous pictures, but it isn't portraiture.

Aside from their value in creating deliberate distortion, camera angles also are useful to help you control background. You may be setting up to shoot a portrait in your own back yard and find that the fence cuts right thru behind your subject's head. By raising the camera only a few inches you can get a simple background of grass or bushes. By lowering the camera sufficiently you can show your subject against the sky.

Angle shots are eye catchers when they are used with discretion, but they won't do for everyday fare. Don't make the mistake of trying to take every picture from an unusual angle. Save this trick for the subjects that are especially suited for it, and then use an extreme angle that gives so much distortion there can be no doubt about your purpose.

Add the use of angle shots to your photographic bag of tricks and remember it when the right occasion comes along. You may find an opportunity to employ this technique on any picture taking excursion.

Many a picture subject automatically demands shooting from a high elevation. Little would be visible of the marching column had the picture been taken from street level.

AERONCA L3B—The GRASSHOPPER. This little plane is a military version of the Aeronca tandem trainer. It differs from the commercial plane by reason of two-way radio and larger side windows. Used for short-range liaison purposes, it is powered by a four cylinder engine.

NORTH AMERICAN SNJ4—The TEXAN. Also called the AT6A by the army and the HARVARD by the R. C. A. F., this is one of the most highly regarded trainers. Top speed is 350 miles an hour in dives, normal speed 206. Has machine gun mounts. Pratt & Whitney 550 horsepower Wasp engine.

Major Ramsey
My dear Sir
The lady—bearer of this—says she has two sons who want to work—Set them at it, if possible—Wanting to work is so rare a want, that it should be encouraged
Yours truly
A. Lincoln

Letter from Lincoln

HOW President Abraham Lincoln frequently mixed a waggish expression with the serious business of life is illustrated in the letter reproduced here, written Oct. 17, 1861, to a Major Ramsay. This is one of the characteristic notes of Lincoln in which his personality comes thru the ordinarily cut and dried words of such documents.

It takes no great imagination to see the trace of a smile on Lincoln's face as he wrote:

"The lady—bearer of this—says she has two sons who want work—Set them at it, if possible—Wanting to work is so rare a want, that it should be encouraged."

Maj. George Douglas Ramsay, to whom the note was written, was an ordnance officer in command of the Washington arsenal. A biography of him states that he was elevated to lieutenant colonel in August, 1861, which was about two months before the Lincoln note was written. It appears, therefore, that the President may have addressed him as major merely from force of habit, or that he may have overlooked or forgotten the promotion.

The letter presented here is not reproduced from the original document, which is in possession of Oliver Barrett of Chicago, but rather from a reproduction of the original, made by the Lakeside Press to demonstrate the versatility and fidelity of the deeptone printing process in the reproduction of old documents, works of art, and the like.

CRAFT PATTERNS BY A. NEELY HALL

★ This light cart speeds garden work from planting to harvest time. Its stream-lined front tilts to the ground to load rakings. Its broad wooden wheels run over loose soil, do not rut the lawn. Jeep and Wain are detailed on Craft Pattern 915.

★ The cushioned knee-bench prevents gardener's knee, saves contact with damp soil or grass. End pockets hold seed packets, trowel, cultivator, knife, string and markers. The knee-bench, an umbrella-handle seed-packet basket, a string reel, and markers are detailed on Craft Pattern 332.

★ It costs little to make a substantial lawn roller that will serve you and the immediate neighborhood a lifetime. Materials are easily obtained, and Craft Pattern 331 shows details for casting and assembling.

For Hands' Sake!

By LOUISE DOOLEY

IF NATURE didn't provide you with a pair of beautifully shaped hands, don't despair; they can be improved upon. Not every woman has been blessed with delicately shaped palms and long, tapering fingers, but many of them have created the illusion of grace and daintiness over capable, workmanlike hands.

Blunt finger tips can be disguised and worked over until they give the effect of pretty ovals. The process begins with shaping the fingernails. Don't make the mistake of filing the nails to conform to the shape of the fingers. Wear them a little longer and file them into deliberate ovals. Polish brought clear to the tips also will help to effect the complete camouflage.

Spend some time each day shaping the finger tips. A rich hand cream or lubricating cream may be used during this process. Hold the finger firmly between the thumb and index finger and squeeze gently from the lower knuckle out to the tip. This is an exercise that will work wonders in improving the shape of the digits. It is best performed with the aid of a cream, but can be done at any convenient time of the day. Don't, however, let it become so much of a habit that it will be done in public.

The shape of the nail can be ruined by neglected cuticle. Use a cuticle softener at each manicure and shape the base of the nail with an orange stick. The thoro cuticle shaping should be supplemented by pushing it gently back with the towel after each hand washing.

Learn to use the hands gracefully. Grace of movement will do as much as all the extraneous aids to create the final impression of hand beauty.

Don't fret too much if nature didn't endow you with perfectly sculptured hands; a little care and camouflaging will do much to create the illusion of grace and delicacy.

PRIVATE FAY ON PARADE!

This is another report from Pvt. William C. Fay, on leave from the Tribune sports department, about his life in the army.

TWO OF MY three major army problems have been solved. The first problem, you will recall, was how to drink coffee and eat cereal out of the same cup at breakfast. After countless mornings of drinking cereal-flavored coffee and eating coffee-flavored cereal there appeared on our tables individual service breakfast food cartons.

Breakfast has become breakfast again. Now nothing goes into the cups but coffee. The individual service carton works this way:

You punch a thumb along the indented lines on the lid, fold back lid, tear open the interior wax paper bag which holds the cereal, pour in sugar and milk, and start eating. The wax paper holds the milk securely as any cup. There is only one drawback. When you scrape bottom you are quite likely to come up with a mouthful of wax paper, brown and indistinguishable from the cereal flakes.

The second problem, which I have not yet mentioned, was how to keep up with my reading. In civilian life I was a lazy reader. I would spot a pertinent article in a newspaper or magazine, carefully cache the article in the magazine rack, then eventually become highly indignant to learn it had been used to start the furnace last February.

Unfortunately, the army does not issue magazine racks. Also, army library hours are infrequent and highly susceptible to interruption. It is at least 100 to 1 you will not read half thru the latest Churchill speech before you are called to some sort of duty or a sergeant steps by your cot to nominate you a committee of one to shovel in the load of coal that five minutes ago was dumped beside the mess hall bins.

On such occasions the army asks only one thing of you—speed. You are expected to be in ranks or bent over the shovel within seconds, if not sooner. As the apocryphal Negro corporal told his rookie squad, "When Ah yells 'Fall out!' Ah wants tuh see nuthin' but a cloud of dust—and when that dust settles Ah wants tuh see nuthin' but a row of statues." Obviously under such conditions a system for prompt disposal of literature must be worked out, or reading abandoned. If you waste precious seconds stuffing newspapers into an overcoat sleeve or unlocking your crammed foot locker to find storage space you will be late falling out, and the sergeant will give you so much K. P. and kindred duties that you will have no time to read for maybe the next two weeks.

A knotty problem, but I solved it, and the solution has lifted me from the lazy reader class. Using my new system, I do not rest, literally or figuratively, until I have read what is latest and most pertinent. For where is a better or more accessible literary cache than under the mattress? A flip of the hand and a newspaper disappears. Bulkier books can be smoothed under the pillow.

Only the third problem remains unsolved: When will some humanitarian invent that vest pocket size instantaneous water heater for early morning shaving when we're in the field?

This Warns You Against Possible Injury and Danger to the Softer Parts of Your Teeth that May Be Exposed by Receding Gums.

"WHO, ME? SLOWLY GRINDING CAVITIES IN MY OWN TEETH?"

YES—YOU DAILY PASTE AND POWDER USERS SUFFER MOST INJURY—SCIENCE SHOWS!

See that cavity?

Brushing did it!

Almost 6 in 10 Adults Suffered Such Cavities—DENTAL AUTHORITY REPORTED

Recent studies at a leading Research Foundation Clinic disclosed this startling evidence: First, 58% of all adults examined had these cavities in softer parts of teeth (exposed by receding gums)—cavities ground-in by abrasives contained in toothpastes and powders they regularly used. Second, the worst of these ground-in cavities were found in teeth cleaned most regularly. Third, 8 in 10 run this risk constantly.

—(Summarized from report in authoritative dental journal)

LOOK at the cavity shown in that tooth (above)—and the evidence printed alongside it!

ABRASIVES CAUSE CAVITIES

Think what that shows!—the more regularly you clean teeth with pastes and powders . . . the more damage you risk . . . slowly grinding-in cavities . . . that may need filling!

NO ABRASIVES IN TEEL

TEEL—the modern liquid dentifrice—protects your teeth because it's the only leading dentifrice to clean without abrasives. The new TEEL Way—that takes just one extra minute a week—makes teeth look their prettiest—SAFELY!

Get TEEL today—at your regular store. Then follow the simple instructions at right. There's beauty in every drop.

NEW SAFE TEEL WAY TAKES ONLY

One Extra Minute a Week!

TEEL comes in a bottle —no bother with tubes

HERE'S ALL YOU DO

1. Brush your teeth every day—thoroughly with TEEL. A few drops on dry or moistened brush. Feel it clean!

2. Once a week brush teeth with plain baking soda on brush moistened with TEEL. Brush at least an extra minute.

Teel protects teeth—Beautifully!

PLASTICS and MAGNESIUM

lent in volume of 1.6 pounds of aluminum or 4.4 pounds of steel.

Magnesium alloys are characterized by great strength, toughness, and durability. As much as 1,000 pounds of the metal may be used in the manufacture of a single military plane. The amount of weight saved by the use of this material, as readily seen, is enormous.

Production of magnesium in this country had its origin in 1914 when the war stopped imports of magnesium chlorides, used in making certain cements. Seeking to make up for the loss, Dr. Herbert Henry Dow, founder of the company, turned to brine, one of the principal constituents of which, it will be recalled, is magnesium. Dr. Dow (hereinafter referred to as Dow Sr. to distinguish him from Dr. Willard H. Dow, a son and present head of the company, who will be referred to as Dow Jr.) had long experimented with processes for the recovery of magnesium chloride. So in a short time he had a plant ready for its production.

In the first World war magnesium metal was in demand by the allied armies for the making of military flares and lights. In powder form it burns readily and brightly, and it now forms one of the components of incendiary bombs. It wasn't used for structural purposes by Americans in the first World war, and when the armistice came the demand for it passed.

Dow Sr., however, recognized its possibilities and continued to work with it. Not only had a good technical process to be devised for making the metal and its alloys, but there had to be developed procedures for working with magnesium metal after it was made. For example, care must be used in handling magnesium shavings or dust, for they are highly inflammable.

The Dow company, as a result of the persistence of Dow Sr. and later of Dow Jr., spent millions on the development of magnesium. Despite reports of the use of magnesium by German aviation manufacturers and others, nothing much was done with the metal in this country. The government and the army both were cool toward the metal.

Thus had it not been for the vision, courage, and persistence of both Dow father and son America would have been caught completely off base with reference to this vital material when it entered World War II. The Dows spent their millions on and devoted a great deal of time to magnesium research because they believed its use as a structural material would ultimately bring profit to the Dow company. Dow is said now to be producing about 95 per cent of all the magnesium made in this country, altho it is expected to have to meet competition later from magnesium plants such as the one under construction at Las Vegas, Nev.

"I can give full credit for the development of magnesium in this country to my father," commented Dow Jr. recently. "I'll admit that we all got mighty tired of hearing about magnesium around here, especially when we had to consider the money we were losing on it. But, thanks to his vision and persistence, we never dropped it."

Magnesium originally was made at Dow's Midland plant, but when the army finally took it up, and a great demand for it developed, it was decided to use the limitless raw material source found in sea water. A huge plant was built in Texas on the Gulf of Mexico coast. Within a year from the time construction work on the plant started, production was under way.

Magnesium is made thru a highly technical process which includes chemical treatment of its three various raw materials—chlorine and lime. Its cost per pound has been dropped from $5 to 20 cents in 25 years.

Not only is magnesium being used in large quantities in the construction of airplanes and airplane engines, but also in numerous other military and naval articles where it is desired to save weight.

Peacetime uses for magnesium are limitless. Among other things for which it may be used are portable tools, typewriters, vacuum cleaners, goggles, and interiors of buses and trains. Because of its lightness when used for parts of a machine, it reduces vibration and metal fatigue. It takes less power to run a machine in which magneseum is used because there is less weight for the power to move.

Like other metals there are certain conditions under which magnesium cannot be used practicably, notably where it would come in contact with any but a few acids. Likewise it should not be used where it comes in contact with sea water except when coated with a protective covering. And there are other cases where it is not advisable to use it.

The Dow company largely makes magnesium for other companies to process. However, it has a large foundry in Michigan where it makes airplane parts.

Next Sunday—Thiokol, the rubber-like synthetic.

★ ALBUM OF THE AIR

This is the eighth of a series of pages presenting players and craftsmen of popular radio programs. Portraits of other personalities of radio will be reproduced in this section next week.

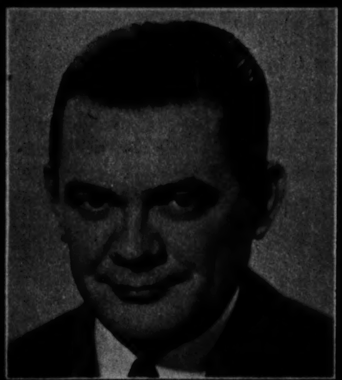
Jane Webb, too-tall girl friend of Joey Webster in "That Brewster Boy," is 17 years old and just out of high school. She was 11 when she won her first radio contract with a Chicago station. She was born in Chicago, educated at Chicago public schools and the Central Y. M. C. A. high school. Currently she is heard on "Bachelor's Children" in addition to "That Brewster Boy."

Eddie Firestone Jr., starred as Joey Brewster in "That Brewster Boy," is a student at Northwestern university but despite that indication of youth, has begun his second decade of broadcasting. Born at San Francisco, he was still in knee pants when he won his first acting job, in a Pacific coast radio show. He was on that program for four years.

Louise Fitch, Joey Brewster's elder sister Nancy, was born at Omaha, Neb., was graduated from Creighton university, wrote continuity for an Omaha radio station, thence broke into acting. She has been working in radio in Chicago since 1936.

The Vinsons, Owen and Pauline, are teamed professionally as well as matrimonially. He directs "That Brewster Boy," she writes the scripts. They met in 1928 in Canada, where they were co-stars of a stock company; had their first experience in radio at Omaha, Neb., when Owen became manager of a station and Pauline went in for script writing.

Constance Crowder, otherwise Mom Brewster, attended the University of Chicago, studied at a New York dramatic school; came into radio by way of vaudeville and stock.



Hugh Studebaker, who plays Dad Brewster, made his first public bow as a soprano in a Kansas City church choir; studied voice, pipe organ, and piano in Chicago and New York; came into radio via a male quartet, vaudeville, and concert.

Clarence Hartzell, impersonator of Uncle Charley, grew up in a family orchestra at Huntington, W. Va.; did a stint of vaudeville; landed in radio as an announcer, at Cincinnati; wrote comedy shows for various stations; came to Chicago in 1931. He also plays a leading part in the serial drama Vic and Sade.

Marvin Mueller, announcer of "That Brewster Boy."

Angel Casey was born at Middletown, O.; began studying for a stage career when she was 6; danced in public when she was 10; was graduated from the University of Cincinnati and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music; had become an actress in little theaters and on the air before coming to Chicago.

"Shoot the Works," broadcast on W-G-N Fridays from 7:30 to 8 p. m. (CWT), is a quiz show, with cash prizes, originating in army and navy stations in and around Chicago. Miss Casey and Miss Neumayer circulate through the audience with portable microphones, selecting participants for the program; the master of ceremonies conducts the show from the stage.

A native of Council Bluffs, Ia., Marilou Neumayer studied dramatics at Duchesne college of the Sacred Heart and broke into radio in her home town as singer and actress. She made her Chicago debut in 1940 in W-G-N's "Let Freedom Ring;" has been heard in the "Chicago Theater of the Air" operettas, and has appeared in several commercial movie shorts.

Johnnie Neblett was born at Houston, Tex.; went to high school in Mississippi; was graduated from the University of Louisiana; made his radio debut while a senior; broke into sports announcing in 1935. He broadcasts football and baseball and is heard in "Open House with Johnnie Neblett" Mondays thru Fridays from 2:30 to 3 p. m. (CWT).

Hair that is naturally lovely doesn't begin at the age of hair-do's and beauty shops. It is the result of mother's early care . . . shampooing regularly with a fine soap like Packers Tar Soap.
Mothers have used Packers for seventy-four years. Its rich pine-cone color, its fragrant pine-woods odor, its snow-white lather that cleanses so gently and rinses so easily . . . all tell you why Packers is superior. The breakfast for the job

That's what a "Breakfast of Champions" is

Many a famous Wheaties champion is fighting the enemy now. Millions more are working hard to help win. These busy days you need a really good breakfast—one that satisfies and helps to sustain you through the morning's work. We believe you will like Wheaties, America's favorite whole wheat breakfast flakes. And we know you will get lots of good useful nourishment from Wheaties, "Breakfast of Champions," with milk and fruit. Milk, fruit and choice whole wheat—three basic, wholesome foods to help you keep pitching. Here's your "Breakfast of Champions," a good breakfast for the man, the woman, the boy and girl on the job.

Special offer! Yours for a 3¢ stamp. Family sample package of Wheaties, also the Betty Crocker booklet, "Thru Highway to Good Nutrition." Send 3¢ stamp, name and address to General Mills, Inc., Dept. 81, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

"Breakfast of Champions"

WITH MILK AND FRUIT

Just try to describe that satisfying Wheaties flavor! Experts have tried and failed. We'll settle for this line: Wheaties have a "second-helping" flavor. Men, women and children from Missouri please note. And you—have you tasted Wheaties lately? How about tomorrow?

It's better to eat the whole of the wheat, and that's what Wheaties give you. All of whole wheat's Thiamine (Vitamin B_1). All of whole wheat's Niacin (another B vitamin). All of whole wheat's iron. All of whole wheat's proteins. All of whole wheat's food-energy. All of the wheat—that's Wheaties! Guaranteed by General Mills, Inc.

Now that we all have to be champions, break that fast with Wheaties, "Breakfast of Champions," with milk and fruit. It's a long, long time from dinner tonight until lunch tomorrow. Altogether too long. So break that fast with Wheaties and get going on the job with a sparkle in your eye and confidence in your stride.

A Teenie Weenie Flood

WHEN the heavy snow melted and ran off into the creek near the Teenie Weenie village that little stream was filled almost to the top of its banks, but when it rained hard for two days the water overflowed and flooded the land on either side of the creek.

The Teenie Weenies spent most of their time standing on the bank and watching the water flow by. They saw all sorts of things drifting on the current and occasionally the Sailor would go out in his pea pod canoe, fasten a line around a lead pencil or wooden clothes pin and tow it to shore, for pencils and clothes pins make fine Teenie Weenie fire-wood when sawed and split into suitable sizes for Teenie Weenie stoves.

The Teenie Weenies worried considerably about Nick the squirrel for his house was in the top of a tree which was right in the middle of the flooded woods. "When the water settles down a little and is not running so swiftly I think we had better paddle out and see if Nick is all right," the General said.

In a couple of days the water had quieted down some and the Sailor and the General put out in a pea pod canoe. When they came to the tree in which Nick lived there was no answer to their shouts, but presently they heard Nick call from a tree near by. The Sailor paddled towards the tree while Nick ran down the trunk and settled on a small limb near the water.

"What are you doing over in this tree?" asked the General when the Sailor had brought the canoe up to the tree.

"I thought," said Nick in the peculiar way he had of talking with the Teenie Weenies, "I could jump from limb to limb and in that way make my way to shore, but I found that I couldn't go far on account of my rheumatism. I'm afraid I couldn't jump back into my home tree and so I thought I'd better stay here until the water went down."

"Have you had anything to eat?" asked the General.

"Nothing since yesterday but a little bark off this tree," answered Nick.

"Well, that won't do," said the General. "We'll bring some food to you just as soon as we can."

The Sailor paddled back to shore and the General told some of the Teenie Weenie men to bring down a few nuts from the Teenie Weenie store house.

"We'll need a raft to carry the nuts out to Nick," said the Sailor. "A pea pod canoe is too light to carry nuts in," so the General ordered one made.

Several of the Teenie Weenies soon made a very good raft by lashing together two clothes pins, a pencil stub, and a small stick with a bit of string. The Old Soldier with a wooden leg made a pair of paddles while the other Teenie Weenies brought the nuts down to the edge of the water. Two peanuts and a hazel nut were loaded onto the raft and Gogo and the Dunce pushed off while the Sailor and the General led the way in a pea pod canoe.

It was hard work to paddle the raft in the swift water and besides there were many floating objects which had to be avoided. Once they ran into an empty, floating bottle and it nearly upset the raft. One of the peanuts rolled off and floated away but fortunately that was the only damage done.

Nick was very happy to get the nuts and he carried them up the tree where he stored them in a knothole. The Teenie Weenies made several trips that day and delivered enough nuts to keep Nick supplied with food for several days.

It was almost a week before the water went down and Nick was able to get back to his home tree. He was very grateful for what the Teenie Weenies had done, and in payment for their kindness he helped them drag the firewood they had pulled out of the water up to the Teenie Weenie woodpile near the shoe house.

Smith A. Funk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond A. Funk, 7557 South Shore drive, newly chosen colonel and commander of the entire Chicago R. O. T. C., of more than eleven thousand members, will perform in his new capacity for the first time Saturday at the annual drill competition for R. O. T. C. units.

Cadet Funk and his staff of 10, chosen in competitive examinations a week ago, will have charge of a review at the close of the competition, in which picked platoons from 27 high schools will participate.

Drills Start at 9 A. M.

The drills will be held in the armory of the 1st regiment, Illinois Reserve militia, at Kedzie and North avenue, beginning at 9 o'clock in the morning and with the last drill set for 2 o'clock in the afternoon. They will be free to the public.

Cadets from Harper, Du Sable, and Bowen High schools are on the corps staff, which was announced as follows:

Has Academic, R. O. T. C. Record.

Cadet Col. Funk has been outstanding in academic and R. O. T. C. work thru all his four years at Tilden. He was graduated from Myra Bradwell Elementary school, 7710 Burnham avenue, in 1939, and entered the Tilden R. O. T. C. the next fall.

Scholastically, he ranks 11th in a class of 421. He is a member of the Honor club and of the National Honor society and has attended three achievement dinners for high ranking students.

Funk has been lieutenant colonel and commanding officer of the Tilden cadet unit, which has a brilliant record of placing first for the last two years both in the city platoon drill competition and in federal R. O. T. C. inspection in the corps area. He has served both semesters this year.

Winner of Tribune Medal.

The youth has been awarded four medals for cadet efficiency, including the Chicago Tribune gold medal, neatest cadet medal, and competitive platoon drill medal, all in 1941, and the American Legion officers' efficiency medal last January. Also, he has won four rifle marksmanship medals and four marksmanship bars awarded by the National Rifle association.

He was commander of the Tilden color guard which functioned on the W-G-N R. O. T. C. night program Feb. 20.

Funk hopes to go to West Point and make a career of the army.

Judges will rank the first 10 platoons in Saturday's competition on the basis of precision and appearance, and awards will be made accordingly.

The schedule for the day follows:

ROSELAND MOOSE SHOE EXCHANGE NETS 40 PAIRS

Forty pairs of shoes were brought to the first shoe exchange conducted by the Roseland lodge, Loyal Order of Moose, last Sunday at 10827 Michigan avenue, Livio Alfonsi, chairman, reported. After the shoes have been cleaned and sterilized they will be available for exchange next Sunday afternoon, when the second shoe exchange is planned for south side residents.

Greatest need exists for boys' shoes, especially for boys 6 to 12 years old, the chairman revealed. "As soon as boys start going outside to play and begin school their shoes wear out quickly," Alfonsi said. Cracks often develop in the uppers and the shoes then cannot be resoled.

A family with one child is the best prospect for securing slightly worn shoes, Alfonsi explained. Shoes that the lone child has outgrown are needed by other families with several children. The Roseland lodge last week asked members to bring in all unused shoes next Sunday, between 2 and 5:30 o'clock, and asks that other south siders do the same if possible.

Cactus Club Members Find Desert Plant Adds Beauty to City Life

From the barren wastes of the southwest, the cactus has become a city sophisticate, dwelling unruffled among apartment house occupants and challenging the imagination of its owners with strange forms, textures, colors, moods, and blooms. Mrs. Christian F. Radden, 10226 Bell avenue, has a greenhouse given over entirely to 500 specimens. A member of the Chicago Cactus and Succulent club, she holds a prize plant, the golden barrel, or echinocactus.

Species of night blooming cerei are found in the greenhouse of Robert Van Sickel, 7728 Calumet avenue, a shop superintendent, whose success as a cactus hobbyist is admired by fellow members in the Cactus and Succulent society. The vine climbing Villbergia nutans, which has six inch blossoms in summer, is supported by an indoor trellis. All specimens are properly labeled with metal or wood tabs.

The Van Sickel greenhouse is home built, six years old, boasts its own heating, electric, and water systems, has an annex and a private green fence—all set like a charming dollhouse in the center of the back yard. Summer finds the cacti in the annex enjoying the sun and rain, with sloping roof sections removed.

The Metals and Minerals Research building of the Illinois Institute of Technology at 34th and Federal streets represents something more to Ludwig Mies van der Rohe than another architectural success for him. It symbolizes the freedom to work, to teach, and to build that he has found in America.

Ludwig Mies van der Rohe.

Now in his fifth year as director of the school of architecture at the institute, he came here simply because he no longer could confine his art and his work to the strait jacket of Nazi ideology. He believed it less difficult "to be a stranger in a strange land than a stranger at home."

Compares Two Studios.

No better illustration of the reasons for his coming and his happiness now could be found than in comparison of his Berlin studio and his present office in the Art institute.

The studio in Berlin was located in Karlsbad strasse, not far from the reichs chancellery. The homes and buildings in the neighborhood were all four or five stories high and were built shoulder to shoulder. Most dated from the days of the empire. Some had housed the offices of the kaiser's government; then housed Nazi party organizations.

Opening the door of the apartment building, the visitor met the "Heil Hitler" of the janitress. The much loved "Grüss Gott" or "God bless you" of other days was gone.

The knock at the door of the third story studio was answered by a blond, fair faced, youthful assistant who regarded the guest with suspicion.

"Yes?" he would say.

Open for Americans.

Then, if the visitor were American, the assistant catching the accent, would smile and open the door wide. Inside was the sanctuary of an artist who cherished freedom — outside were the agents of a government which sought control over every act of the individual.

The studio was small, well lighted, and white walled. Here was evidence of the intellect of the man who lived there, books in many languages, modern paintings, which somehow had escaped the firebrand of Hitler youth bent on imposing the Nazi kultur. The photographs were of the great works of Van der Rohe.

Here was an old picture of the German embassy in Petrograd — now Leningrad, Russia. Van der Rohe had supervised its construction in the days of the czars. There was a photograph of the residence museum he had designed for Mrs. Koeller-Mueller of the Hague to house her famous Van Gogh collection. And over there a picture of the German pavilion he planned and executed for the world's fair in Barcelona, Spain, in 1929. And everywhere were photographs of the Bauhaus at Dessau, of which he once was director.

Dessau School Flourished.

The Bauhaus, an architectural school of which he became head in 1930, flourished in Dessau from 1923 until 1932. Then in rented space in an old Berlin factory it carried on until 1933, when, slowly strangled, it died.

The visitor to the studio in late 1937, had he asked for Van der Rohe,

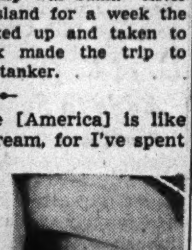
From Walter L. DeVinck, electrician's mate, 2d class, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. August DeVinck, 2212 Sherman avenue, Evanston. DeVinck, in the navy since December, 1938, was at Pearl Harbor, participated in four naval battles in one of which his ship was sunk. After being on a small island for a week the survivors were picked up and taken to Australia. DeVinck made the trip to America on an oil tanker.

Everything here [America] is like an unbelievable dream, for I've spent so much time convincing myself that I'd never reach the United States again until after the war.



Walter L. DeVinck.

"The food is like —— well my first meal was so good for a change from those I'd eaten over there that tears of appreciation and thanksgiving were really hard to hold back. I can safely say that you can smell the difference in the air alone, taste America in everything you eat.

"It's absolutely incredible to notice such tremendous differences between the quality of things you hear, see, smell, feel, etc., here and in other lands. Mother, I sincerely believe that there was a garden of forbidden fruit—a God's special creation of the best which we now call America. I'm still so nervous and jumpy about being here that I just can't settle down to a normal state of mind just yet.

"Words, written or spoken, will never reveal to the people of this country just what a paradise they live in. The only ones who will realize are those now fighting on the war fronts—the sons and daughters who are now in no position to relay the facts that all American people should know. The man behind the man behind the gun is the one on whom we depend to win this war.

"Man, what a treat; desks to write on, soft lounge chairs, good radio programs, soda fountains, canteens, cokes, clean shower rooms, plenty of liberty, and time off and beautiful women are all over the place. The first pretty girl I saw on the train going across the bridge to the city looked so welcome to my eyes that I wanted to stare at her.

"I feel like some one who is getting a new start in life—a new chance to survive. I'm happy again."

From Corp Robert E. Witt to his "Dear Mom"—Mrs. Edna Witt, 3735 Bosworth avenue. Corp. Witt, member of a coast artillery unit, was reported missing in action after the fall of Corregidor in May, 1942. His mother believes Corp. Witt to be a prisoner of the Japs.

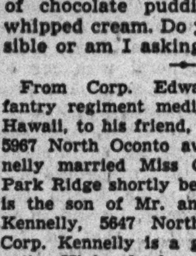
"I may be a little early for this but you can keep this part of the letter on file for when I get home. Here 'tis, the first dinner I would like to have you cook for me after I get off the train. Of course I'll want . . . over to eat with me and you can invite any one you wish to but—ah, yes—the menu.

Robert E. Witt.

"Let's see now, nice pork roast, mashed potatoes and gravy, pickles and olives, waldorf salad, creamed wax beans, applesauce, sweet potatoes and a pineapple juice drink. For dessert, coffee, one of your chocolate layer cakes [is three layers too much?], one of grandma's and one of Aunt Anna's apple pies and a big dish of chocolate pudding with lots of whipped cream. Do you think it's possible or am I asking too much?"

Kennelly married Miss Carlotta Nelson of Park Ridge shortly before he sailed. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin M. Kennelly, 5647 North Harlem avenue. Corp. Kennelly is a graduate of St. Ignatius High school.

"The islands are a revelation and a disappointment. My literary perusals had led me to expect too much. When the island first appeared out of the mists of the sea, a brilliant emerald mound rising like a green felt poker table from the very lap of Neptune, it was the picture that I had always held in my mind of what Ireland would be like, lush, abundant, fertile greenness, moist and always the softly rolling sea.



Edward Kennelly.

"I had expected hot sands, bamboo trees, and towering coconuts. Of course they are all growing here but not in the amount that you would expect. And I can assure you no Hedy Tondelayo in brilliant sarong offered to make 'tiffin' for me. As a matter of fact what most of the kids wear here might be called a modified zoot suit, sans shoes, of course.

"When we disembarked we were loaded into trucks and sent to our destination. If you can imagine a tour thru the Lincoln park conservatory on a tricycle you have a faint idea of the beauty of the glorious flowers along the roadside.

TRIBUNE WILL PRINT 3 DETAILED LETTERS FROM YANKS WEEKLY

The War As Fighters See It department provides a medium wherein letters from service men and service women received by relatives and friends may have a wider circle of appreciative readers.

That more space may be given to letters which, because of their interest, merit more than excerpts, but three letters will be selected for publication each week. The briefest of letters, however, will be given equal consideration. Even the postal card message may contain a nugget of originality. For each letter printed in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, $5 will be paid the sender.

Senders of letters are asked to comply with the following suggestions:

Send COPIES of the treasured letters, do NOT send the originals. Do not send framed photographs or scrapbooks. THE TRIBUNE cannot be responsible for letters lost in transmission, nor return the letters.

Photographs of the letter writer and a brief biography of the writer are desired. Those requesting return of the pictures should write the request and address on the back of the pictures, but THE TRIBUNE regrets that it cannot accept responsibility for such return.

Address Service Letter Editor, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Chicago, Ill.

Ewing avenue will be widened from 51 to 56 feet between 95th and 100th streets this year, according to plans of the city department of streets and electricity as reported by William R. Matthews, assistant engineer in charge. Clark street will be widened from 48 to 56 feet between Cermak road and Harrison street.

These projects on the south side are among 15 scheduled for the year in a $3,000,000 motor fuel tax paving program, expanded considerably from the $1,750,000 average of the last three years, Matthews reported. The only critical materials needed, he said, are steel pins to reinforce joints. Priorities will be asked for these, but if pins are not available the slabs will be laid without them. Last year priority was given for about 70 per cent of the city paving jobs.

All but one of the 15 pavements will be widened, said Matthews, to give four traffic lanes and two parking lanes wherever possible.

NAME 5 PUPILS TO PLAN YOUTH WEEK IN APRIL

Five high school students have been named to represent five high school districts in the city in making plans for the second annual Chicago students' vocational convention to be held in the Morrison hotel April 21 as a part of Youth Week observance. Later 10 representatives will be named from each of the city's 40 high schools.

The convention was originated last year by the Union League club and Altrusa, with the coöperation of other women's civic groups. "Youth in the Service of America" is the theme for this year's session.

Former W-G-N Newsman Trains for Army Air Corps

Prickly Cacti Are Flowers to These Folk

BY IRENE PONTO.

The Chicago branch of the Cactus and Succulent Society of America was organized three years ago by Frank Kranz, 7640 South Lowe avenue, assistant florist foreman at Marquette park, who formerly had been in charge of the cactus room at Garfield park conservatory. Semi-scientific in nature, the club has a monthly bulletin of articles describing varieties and care of cacti.

Scientific terms roll easily off the tongues of members at the biweekly Tuesday evening sessions held in the gold room of Garfield park conservatory. Few cactus plants have had their botanical names popularized, and cactophiles must struggle in conversation with lengthy Latin names, of which prowess they are secretly proud.

As is true of many things, the cactus may be viewed thru appreciative or unfriendly eyes. Mrs. Christian F. Radden, 10226 Bell avenue, who built a greenhouse last June exclusively for her cacti, started her acquaintance with the cacti by remarking, when a friend suggested they view the cactus display at a flower show:

"What, those ugly things? Dear me, no!"

Exhibit Changed Her Mind.

Led encouragingly, however, to the exhibit, she was entranced with the cactus' own stature as a plant and its amazing ability to simulate pebbles, baskets, cotton fluff, a bishop's cap, white rock, mushrooms, and modern skyscrapers. Today, Mrs. Radden, owner of 500 specimens, has the authoritative cactus text by Britten and Rose, holds informal lectures in her greenhouse, and holds membership in the cactus society and garden department of the Beverly Hills Woman's club.

Fifteen years ago Robert Van Sickel, 7728 Calumet avenue, saw cacti in bloom in Saskatchewan. Today, added to a private greenhouse for his varieties and rare plants, he is a photographic experimenter with miniature cactus arrangements for a stereoscope.

The Cactus and Succulent club has won ribbons at flower shows in Hamilton and Ridge park. At the Hamilton park show, when a night blooming variety promised to unfold spectacularly around midnight, interested persons drew up chairs, some one played a piano, and all waited for the flower's debut, Kranz said.

Southwest Is Mecca.

Sooner or later a cactophile will travel to the southwest or to Mexico to see cacti in their native habitat. He returns loaded with plants or photographic records of them, and a fund of questions that send him searching thru new catalogs and texts. The club has taken all day trips to see the collection of Arthur Blocher in Amboy, Ill., to view Milwaukee, Wis., collections, and has attended a cactus convention at the Missouri botanical gardens.

Mrs. Eugene Berry, 1620 West 102d place, has species of epiphyllum and zygocactus in her private greenhouse, and Kranz, whose speciality is grafting, has the rare plant, Rebutia senilis, grafted to a base, Selinocereus Boeckmannii. This year all members received tiny cuttings of cacti to raise under varying conditions of temperature, soil, and water. Next year they will report upon the results, and the secretary, Mrs. Cornelia Hunter, 8954 South Oglesby avenue, will be able to compile accurate data for future cactophiles.

ASK 20 PER CENT INCREASE IN TIN CANS AND FATS

Session Wednesday in Grand Crossing.

With the aim of increasing by 20 per cent the salvage of tin cans and the conservation of grease and fats in OCD division 2, a series of meetings is scheduled for the 25 communities of the area. The first meeting will be at 8 o'clock Wednesday for the Grand Crossing community at Grand Crossing park.

Other objectives of the meetings—open to any resident of the community where they are held—will be to increase the planting of war gardens and the use of the consumer information service by 100 per cent over last year. Designed to dramatize the community service phase of civilian defense, the meetings will be sponsored by the community commanders, the salvage, conservation, war garden, and consumer information chairman of each of the communities.

The series of meetings will be conducted by W. J. McDillon, division chairman of salvage and conservation; Ernest Gries, division war garden chairman, and Mrs. Ruth Smith, division consumer information chairman.

Save 10 Tons Weekly.

Mr. McDillon estimated that 20,000 pounds of grease and fats were being saved weekly in his division. Since August, he said, there have been approximately 800,000 pounds of tin cans salvaged. No figures were available on the use of the consumer information service and the growing of war gardens last year.

Stressing the need for conservation of grease and fats, Mr. McDillon said the United States stockpile of glycerine was now 20 million pounds "in the red." Pointing out that almost the entire supply of tin formerly came from Malaya—now under Japanese control—he emphasized the need for saving tin cans by reporting that only 44 tons of tin were produced in the nation last year. "The undoubted shortage of food we are facing," he said, "points to the need of increasing garden acreage."

Dates of other community meetings will be announced when the schedule is completed. Communities in which the meetings will be held include: Ada, Auburn Park, Avalon Park, Beverly, Brainard, Calumet Heights, Chatham, Chesterfield, East Side, Fernwood, Gresham, Hegewisch, Morgan Park, Mount Greenwood, Pullman, Riverdale, Roseland, Russell Square, South Chicago, South Deering, South Shore, Stony Island Park, Washington Heights, and West Pullman.

To Exhibit War Products.

At the Grand Crossing meeting war products, sluch as ammunition and products, such as ammunition and salvage materials from which they can be made. The differences between rubber and synthetic rubber will be illustrated. Fats and greases will be set beside glycerin, most essential to explosives, which is derived from the fats and greases.

Meetings in other communities will follow the same pattern, Mr. McDillon said. After the demonstrations of the need for the materials and the methods of collection questions may be asked from the floor.

Walter Feldhoff is community commander of Grand Crossing. Salvage efforts are directed by Mrs. Kathryn J. Millis. Mrs. Ruby Speakman is conservation chairman; Mrs. Mary Alm is consumer information chairman, and Bernard Thompson heads war garden activities.

Mr. McDillon reported that altho all residents were invited the meetings would be of special benefit to block wardens of the four services.

Infantile Paralysis Drive in Calumet City Nets $570

A recent tag day drive for the infantile paralysis foundation in Calumet City netted $570, according to City Clerk Steve Maciejewski, cochairman of the city's chapter of the national foundation. Funds were sent to Herbert Lorber, Cook county chairman.

REV. R. W. SCHLOERB TO MARK 25TH YEAR IN MINISTRY TODAY

The Rev. Rolland W. Schloerb, pastor of the Hyde Park Baptist church, 5600 Woodlawn avenue, will complete his 25th year in the ministry today and will begin his 15th year as pastor of the Hyde Park church. At the 11 o'clock service today he will preach on "Twenty-five Years in the Ministry." His career as a minister began in World War I. when he served as a chaplain. At the same service Alfred Painter, assistant to Dean Charles W. Gilkey of the University of Chicago chapel, will be ordained.

The Rev. R. W. Schloerb.

DePriest Seeks Seat Held by Ald. Grant.

BY HAROLD SMITH.

One of the quietest aldermanic runoff election campaigns in years is under way in the 3d ward, where Oscar De Priest, former G. O. P. congressman and for many years a leader among the Negroes, is seeking to unseat Ald. Benjamin A. Grant, a fellow Negro finishing his first council term.

Observers say that altho the Republican tide is running high in the ward, De Priest, because of his age and uncertain health, faces an uphill pull in his effort to return to the city council, from which he retired in 1917 after completing one two year term. The aldermanic term is now four years.

Many Shifts in Ward.

There has been a general shifting of the party lineup in the ward since the 1939 election, in which Grant and De Priest eliminated Ald. Robert R. Jackson from the runoff, which De Priest lost, 16,328 to 12,205. Since then both party organizations have had schisms, which still persist to some degree so far as the council race is concerned.

On the Democratic side the split was between Ald. Grant and the Democratic committeeman, County Commissioner Edward M. Sneed. This rift began about a year ago over party management in the ward.

Thru the efforts of other leaders of the party the two men were persuaded to make a public show of peace, which came with Sneed's announcement that he would handle the Grant campaign. There were persistent reports, however, that not all the Sneed workers are satisfied with the arrangement, and that some have gone over to the De Priest side.

Split During Campaign.

The Feb. 23 election campaign was marked by a G. O. P. split between De Priest, the ward committeeman, and another group led jointly by George A. Lawrence, an attorney for the state industrial commission, and Zedrick T. Braden, former vice president of the regular organization, who finished third in the aldermanic election this year.

Braden is reported to have split with De Priest over the latter's council candidacy, Braden holding that either he or some younger and more vigorous man should carry the party banner against Ald. Grant. Up to last week Braden and Lawrence maintained silence as to their intentions toward De Priest, but made it clear that they were working tooth and nail for McGibbin for mayor and the rest of the Republican ticket. It was predicted that both will remain on the aldermanic sidelines, leaving their precinct workers free to choose between Grant and De Priest.

Each Predicts Victory.

The candidates themselves were optimistic. Ald. Grant predicted he will carry the ward by 2,000 votes. He declared that expressions from religious and civic leaders in the ward indicate they will support him because of his council activities in behalf of his race, such as insistence on the employment of more Negroes by the traction lines.

De Priest workers declare the former congressman, because of his previous council and national legislative experience, will be a more vigorous and effective ward representative than the present one. He pledges replacement of half day schools for ones offering full time study, improved lighting, more adequate police protection and wider employment of Negroes by utilities and other quasi-public organizations.

Situation in 5th Ward.

There were developments last week in the warm 5th ward aldermanic campaign. Horce G. Lindheimer, former county treasurer who has the city hall indorsement, announced that former Ald. James J. Cusack Jr., who lost to Paul H. Douglas four years ago, had joined forces with him. Lindheimer promised he would insist on a south side branch of the county hospital to be located in the 5th ward.

Bertram B. Moss, the Democrat from whom the Kelly-Nash help was snatched, appeared to be getting help from the forces of Walter Johnson, whom the Douglas organization supported in the first election this year.

Among Johnson's fellow members on the University of Chicago staff who declared for Moss last week were Prof. George C. Bogert of the law school, Prof. Jerome G. Kerwin of the political science department and Prof. Samuel N. Nerlove of the business school. Other former Johnsonites joining up with Moss were Mrs. M. L. Purvin, member of the Chicago library board, and Miss Pearl Franklin, educator active in the teacher's union.

In the 7th ward Bernard Goodman, who ran third in the election, asked his followers to vote for Mathew J. Ryan, Democrat. Goodman was Democratic candidate for state representative in 1940 and 1942. Nicholas J. Bohling Jr. is the candidate the Republicans are backing.

OCD Drama.

"Fight for Freedom," a two act drama with radio artists as members of the cast, will be presented in the Woodlawn community at the Hyde Park High school at 8 o'clock Thursday. It is sponsored by the park district and the OCD.

turns into a nice gooey mud. The climate isn't too bad in many respects, however, and it certainly beats that of Ireland or England.

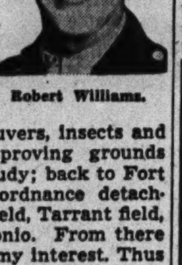
"These folks are a strange lot. Some of the homes are modern and nice, and some of the people are well educated and clean. Others are a strange mixture of races. Some of them look as if they never had a bath and I am firmly convinced that this is true in most cases. They are in rags mostly. They wear their clothes until they rot and then they patch them and wear them until the patches rot.

"Some live with their chickens, goats, and sheep, all in the same room. They beat their animals and their wives. They steal anything, and I guess some would probably slit your throat for a dime or less.

"The animals look like they are almost starved to death. The dogs used to dig up our garbage as fast as we would bury it and then some of the native kids would chase the dogs so they could get at the garbage. I guess much of this was due to the fact that the Germans took every bit of available food but I don't doubt that much of this went on before. Needless to say the situation is improving considerably since we took over.

From Aviation Cadet Robert F. Williams to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Williams, 3432 North Albany avenue. Williams, a graduate of Roosevelt High school, studied electrical communications at the University of Colorado. He is stationed now at Enid, Okla.

"Just another day and I'll be going into my third year in the army. That's a long time for a guy like me to be hanging around with but one employer. Now I look back to the dreadful days of Camp Wallace and its mud, the Fort Bliss auxiliary camp and its sand and wind, Fort Bliss proper in brick barracks, then the Louisiana maneuvers, insects and vermin; Aberdeen proving grounds and the intensive study; back to Fort Bliss and the 8th ordnance detachment; to Ellington field, Tarrant field, and finally San Antonio. From there on the air has held my interest. Thus two years of travel experience and education, in a form.



Robert Williams.

"Life as a whole has been a fast moving thing to those of my generation. Two world wars, a depression unequaled in history, a three-term President, men flying in large numbers, the political issues, education. Really a breath taking pace.

"I don't regret the last two years devoted to the service. It is little enough to pay for having enjoyed the 24 years before in a free country."

THREE NEW WAR PLANTS ARRIVE IN BLUE ISLAND

Use All Factory Space in Southwest Suburb.

Blue Island, southwest suburb of 17,000 population, has become host to three new industries within the last six months, Mayor John M. Hart proudly announced.

The companies, all of which are related directly or indirectly to aviation, are the Cardox corporation, manufacturers of fire extinguishing equipment and liquid; the Vapo Fire corporation, combustion machinery and pressure valves; and the Wickwire Spencer Aviation corporation, a subsidiary of the Wickwire Spencer Steel company, which makes a new automatic variable pitch propeller in Blue Island.

"We are with industry," Mayor Hart declared last week. "We have welcomed industry and tried to cooperate in every way." He said that with the arrival of the new firms no factory space now was available in Blue Island. "Any new company coming in here would have to build," Hart said.

City Clears Title to Land.

The city council recently adopted an ordinance to vacate a strip of land along Minnesota avenue and Wahl street, at the corner occupied by the former machinery warehouse of the Pronger Brothers Construction company. The Cardox corporation, which will start to use the building this spring, discovered the brick building stood several feet over the property line. By its action, the city cleared title to the land for the company.

Fire and police protection problems have been worked out coöperatively with Blue Island civic authorities and representatives of the factories.

Make Airport Fire Trucks.

The small Cardox factory of about 50 workmen will produce a custom built fire truck for military airports. Merrill G. Marshall, 1811 East 72d street, manager of the truck department in the general offices at 307 North Michigan avenue, assisted in research work on the vehicle in the Monee plant of the Cardox corporation.

Gunnar Taube, 8610 Blackstone avenue, will be the general superintendent, and business and accounting offices of the truck production department will be at the Blue Island plant.

The Vapo Fire company, 11957 Vincennes avenue, Blue Island, started operations about six weeks ago, according to Ralph M. Henderson, secretary.

Flossmoor Resident Heads Firm.

Mark C. Bates, Flossmoor, is president of the Vapo Fire company, and other officers are W. T. Kitchen, La Grange, vice president; H. D. Steinberg, 409 East 72d street, vice president in charge of engineering; and J. S. Anderson, 7209 South Michigan avenue, treasurer.

The Vapo Fire company will be one of two factories in the country to manufacture a high pressure steel plug valve used in making high octane gasoline. The valves are on the WPB list of critical articles.

Occupying the former plant of the Borden company, which was built 8 years ago, the Vapo Fire company is housed in an attractive building painted white and black in the factory interior and buff in the offices. Fluorescent lighting is used in the strictly modern machine shop, and the building is all power ventilated. All machinery, Henderson said, is individually motorized. When the company goes into a second work shift, it will employ from 75 to 100 skilled workmen.

Plan for Peace Time, Too.

Three years ago, when Wickwire developed an automatic variable pitch propeller for a small airplane, there was no intention of developing a propeller for war use, Joe Stites, 11059 Hoyne avenue, general manager of the Blue Island plant, said. The propeller is used on training planes. It is no war baby, however, and will be built in peacetime for small ships.

It is expected that propellers will be shipped from Blue Island this month. The company, located in its old subsidiary plant, that of the American Wire Fabrics, 2350 West 136th street, hopes to employ local men and needs at present skilled machinists and machine operators, according to Stites.

First Unit of New Tech Campus

The Metals and Minerals Research building of the Illinois Institute of Technology at 34th and Federal streets is the first unit of the new campus to be completed. Ludwig Mies van der Rohe, internationally famous architect and voluntary exile from Germany, who is director of the institute's school of architecture, made the plans for the campus and the building.

would have been answered with, "Why — he's in America."

It was then he came to the United States for the first time. He did not know how long he would stay—until John Holabird, Chicago architect, and H. T. Heald, president of the Illinois Institute of Technology, invited him to become director of the institute's school of architecture. It was then, with promise that he could teach as he wanted, that he decided to make America his home.

In his new studio here, on the ground floor of the Art institute, the real Van der Rohe feels himself again.

Just "Mies" to Pupils.

When he first came to the school students addressed him as Mr. van der Rohe, but that long ago gave way to "Mies." And those who study under him call him that with a familiar and affectionate respect.

One student, recently graduated, a granddaughter of the famed American architect Frank Lloyd Wright, once asked Van der Rohe, "Mies! Why are we allowed so little self-expression?"

He pondered the question in view of his insistence that his students in their four years limit themselves to his four courses — drawing, construction, function, and architectural art. He told her to come for her answer the next day.

"Matter of Self-Expression."

When she arrived for her answer he handed her paper and pencil and told her to write her name. "There," he said, "is a matter of self-expression. First you learned the ABCs. Then you learned to write. The way you write you learned last of all. So is it with architecture. First you learned the fundamentals, then how to build. The way you choose to build comes last. That is self-expression."

Van der Rohe, who lives at 200 East Pearson street, has already taken out his first papers and soon will be an American citizen. At 56, Van der Rohe, who is medium of height, dark, and somewhat stocky in build, has finished plans for the new campus of the Illinois Institute of Technology on the south side.

In his words, "I like America; I like its people; and I particularly like Chicago."

War to Delay New Traffic Lights on Stony Island Ave.

The city council has authorized spending $1,923.64 to install four-way traffic control lights at Stony Island avenue and 68th street, but shortage of copper wiring will delay the work, according to Leslie Sorenson, city traffic engineer. War plant installations will take priority over the street lights and will use what little wire the city can get, Sorenson indicated. Many accidents have occurred at the intersection where Stony Island widens into a boulevard.

CHANUTE OPENS A NEW DOOR TO SKILLFUL HANDS

It's a Natural for 'Chilluns with Wings.'

BY ROSCOE SIMMONS.

Chanute, Ill., March 20.—Chanute field, one of the most famous of American air training bases, is more campus than camp. It is school and college, a university of specialization. It is heart of the army air forces technical command, altho headquarters of the command is in Knollwood, N. C.

Situated almost mid-Illinois, the sweep of its acres, the architecture of countless buildings, the earnest demeanor of its student soldiers, all speak the spirit of this laboratory of flight.

Here assemble American youth, without distinction as to race or color, to study side by side how to keep fighting ships in the air. Without Chanute and its dozen sister schools, the epic story of American air fighters could not be told.

Trainees Picked for Aptitude.

Trainees reach Chanute not by their own choice, but because they were picked from their units for aptness; as fit to go on with higher technical knowledge required to "keep 'em flying." Here those who study flying almost never fly.

Chanute is representative of the integration of every creed and color and race into the unanimity of war. It is so with the student body and so with its "faculty."

Glamour of the military camp—drill, marching, music—is missing here. Nor are the skies over Chanute filled with ships. But as a technical command Chanute cannot possibly be second to any similar center in a world of war.

Send Ships Up Right.

The stirring motto of the army air forces training—SUSTINEO ALAS—was repeated to a colored [soldier] student. "I know," he said, "but I was never much on Latin, but I'll do my best to send the ships up right, and if they're downed I'll send 'em right back up all right again."

Subjects taught include parachute rigging, link trainer [where those who teach flying themselves may not know how to fly], teletype machinery, sheet metal, welding, heat treating, electrical devices, instruments of the earth and the heavens, special purpose vehicles, and the weather.

"God's Chilluns Got Wings."

One of the many colored boys, shaping an after-the-war career for machinery, was reminded of the English version of the command's motto—"I Sustain the Wings." "Well," he said, "since all God's chilluns got wings, I ought to be good working with 'em."

Every day is Commencement day at Chanute and the graduates are dispatched to ground centers stretching across the land. Each student studies to become expert on one thing; seeks to master one part of an airship. Marks here are not made on ancestry but on industry, attention, aptitude. When the graduates move out, they may turn up even in places where custom never expected to see them.

Some may be surprised to learn that colored instructors teach at Chanute, instruct some of the most difficult courses. But you see the colored instructors in every shop, surrounded by white and colored students. One colored instructor, Ernest Curtis, native of Springfield, Ill., was himself a student at Chanute. Within a year he was student and teacher.

Other Colored Instructors.

Other colored instructors at Chanute include Earl W. Smith, teletype; Robert Dickson, heat treating; Thomas Hopkins, welding; Wyatt Isabell, electrical division; M. D. Lee, link trainer, and Kenneth Brooks, sheet metal. The army never tells all, but many things one may see for himself.

The 99th Pursuit Squadron, composed of colored flyers, was once stationed at Chanute. Necessity of war sent them to other fields and duties. The squadron no doubt felt regret at leaving the command of Brig. Gen. R. E. O'Neill, commanding officer at Chanute, who had said of all his boys: "I will see you thru in keeping with military necessity, with our war aims, and what is just."

Going and coming is endless here, and tomorrow may bring back the 99th or two or three squadrons. As elsewhere, discipline is doing its work at Chanute. Many of the boys call Chanute an opportunity.

Opens a New Door.

The big name at Chanute, as elsewhere in the technical training command, is that of Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, its commander. He stirs the imagination of youth.

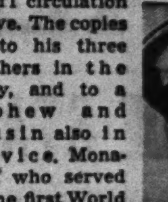
"Yes sir," he said, "I'm reading about Gen. Weaver, my countryman, our high man." He then added: "Gen. Weaver opened a new door to me, he and Uncle Sam, and I'm beating it out for them." That was his story, deeper far in looks than in words.

SOUTH SIDE VETERAN EDITS NEWSLETTER FOR KIN IN SERVICE

Clement A. Monahan, 1040 East 47th street, edits a biweekly newsletter with a total mail circulation of five. The copies go to his three brothers in the army, and to a nephew and cousin also in service. Monahan, who served in the first World war, edits the paper by including excerpts from their letters and inserting family and neighborhood news.



Lt. Raymond Monahan.

Raymond K. Monahan, who entered the army last May, was commissioned recently a lieutenant in the signal corps. He graduated from Iowa State college, where he was president of his graduating class. If he should be assigned to the European theater of war, it will not be his first visit, as he was one of three Americans who judged world champion live stock abroad in 1925. He met the late King George V. and President Coolidge while acting on the judging team.

The two other brothers are Arthur P. Monahan, at Truex field, Madison, Wis., whose son Robert is in the navy, and Glen J. Monahan, who is stationed at the Brooklyn, N. Y., army base. Their fifth brother, Anselmo, died in the first World war. John L. Monahan, a cousin, is in the army for the third time, having served on the Mexican border in 1915 and in the first World war.

STAINED GLASS WINDOW TELLS LIFE OF PASTOR

1st Presbyterian Church Gets Covert Memorial.

Dr. Harold L. Bowman, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, 64th street and Kimbark avenue, will dedicate a stained glass window placed in the bay of the pastor's study at the church at the 11 o'clock service next Sunday to honor the late William Chalmers Covert, pastor of the church from 1913 to 1924. In 1935 Dr. Covert was elected moderator of the general assembly, highest office in the Presbyterian church. He died Feb. 4, 1942, at his home in Germantown, Pa.

Mrs. Covert, her daughter, Mrs. Louis Heyl Nichols of 5844 Stony Island avenue, and her two sons, Hudson Covert of Haverford college, Haverford, Pa., and Seward Covert of Cleveland, O., will attend the dedication. At 10:30 o'clock friends of Dr. Covert will have an opportunity to see the window and to meet Mrs. Covert and her family.

Designed by Personal Friend.

The window was designed and executed by the Willett studios of Philadelphia. Henry Lee Willett, a Presbyterian elder, was a personal friend of Dr. Covert and assisted with the planning of the window.

Three aspects of Dr. Covert's ministry are symbolized in the three central lancets of the window. Theme of the middle lancet is that he was a preacher of the Gospel. In 1888 he took his bride to the small church of St. Paul's Park, Minnesota, which is portrayed in the window. A gavel symbolizes his election as moderator.

Fort Dearborn Shown.

Fort Dearborn, with a gothic spire growing out of it, is shown below in the central lancet. This represents the First Presbyterian church, founded in 1833. Dr. Covert became pastor in 1913 when it and the 41st Street Presbyterian church merged. He had served as pastor of the latter church since 1905.

The panel to the left of the center lancet is devoted to Chistian education. A figure representing the church is shown teaching children of all races, symbolizing Dr. Covert's contribution to Christian education. He was elected first general secretary of the board of education in 1923.

The third aspect of Dr. Covert's life portrayed in the panel to the right by the center lancet is the ministry of music. It portrays his efforts to help the church realize the importance of the finest in hymns and music.

Honors Are Depicted.

Other sections are devoted to education and honors of Dr. Covert. There are seals of Hanover college, from which he was graduated in 1885; of Blackburn and Waynesburg colleges which honored him with degrees; of Hood College for Women, of which he was director, and of the McCormick seminary, where Dr. Covert received theological training.

Before the window was shipped to Chicago it was placed in the Witherspoon building, headquarters of the Presbyterian church, in Philadelphia.

HOW DOGS SERVE IN FRONT LINES TO BE TOLD TODAY

Stanley Johnston Talks on Sportsmen Spotlight.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent and author of "Queen of the Flat Tops," will be a guest of Bob Becker on his program over W-G-N at 3 p. m. today. Johnston will tell about dogs that go to sea and dogs he has seen in battle. Becker will also give a report on the army's sentry dog training program at Fort Robinson, Nebraska.

W-G-N's new chief of production, Lewis James, has been in radio as a tenor since 1921. He's one of the real old timers. For a decade from 1926 to 1936 he was featured with the Revelers, probably the best known of all radio quartets.

What was formerly the Ben Bernie show on CBS, because of the illness of the Old Maestro, is now "Keep the Home Fires Burning," a program of relaxing music, addressed mainly to workers in war plants. Jack Fulton Jr., formerly tenor soloist on the show, has gone east and is singing with Bob Crosby's orchestra.

Something new at W-G-N is the feminine sound effects technician. First of her sex to undertake this rôle at the station is Genevieve Capstaff. W-G-N is feeling the man power pinch. HARPER SCHOOL WINS IN COPPER, BRASS CAMPAIGN

Average Best Girl Brings in Greatest Amount.

Harper High school's 1,886 students have collected more copper, brass, and bronze than any other Chicago school, on a per pupil basis, it is announced by John Howatt, chief engineer of the board of education, who received reports from the 41 city high schools and 337 elementary schools.

An average of 3.4 pounds of the nonferrous metals were collected for the school by its students during the 12 day test campaign made last month for the war production board. A total of 6,520 pounds were brought to the schoolyard.

Girl Is Champion.

Joyce Maki, 15 years old, a sophomore at Harper, collected 1,520 of the 6,250 pounds, Butler Laughlin, school principal, revealed. She will be awarded a certificate of merit by William L. McFetridge, director of salvage for the Chicago Metropolitan office of civilian defense. Miss Maki is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Maki, 6553 Wood street, across the street from the school. She is a member of the Harper Legion of Honor, having two E's and two S's in her studies. Algebra is her favorite subject, and she hopes to become a school teacher or mathematician. She has been a drama student four years.

Miss Maki was aided by five other students in bringing her scrap metal to the school. They are Evelyn Bader, Louis Drazin, Salvador De Rosa, Robert Kennedy, and Harry Tannahill, all juniors or sophomores.

Robert Browning Second.

Robert Browning, 1654 West 63d street, a sergeant in Harper's R. O. T. C. corps, and James Schneider, 1257 West 77th place, placed second and third respectively in the student scrap drive.

Browning, a sophomore, who claims no relationship with the late English poet of the same name, composed some lines which were posted on the school bulletin board at the height of the campaign. Following are excerpts:

. . . bring to school what scrap you can
Bring all those pots and that old pan.
Search your home; look all around
For thru such searches things are found
Which prove to be a grateful aid. . . .
The money received from collected scrap
Will buy some bonds to slap a Jap. . . .
And keep in mind that all your scrap
May kick the axis off the map.

Buy $2,200 in Stamps.

Since the first of January, Harper students have purchased approximately $2,200 in war stamps, and half that sum in war bonds, Miss Berenice McDermott, school war activities coördinator, reported last week. Miss McDermott, an English teacher, was also in charge of the school's metal scrap drive.

Lindblom High school students collected the largest aggregate weight of copper, brass, and bronze—7,334 pounds. On a per student average of 1.9 pounds, this put Lindblom in second place. The eight other high schools with the next highest per pupil averages are as follows:

Fenger	2,222	.60
Tilden	910	.20
Hirsch	362	.17
Harrison	546	.15
Roosevelt	375	.14
South Shore	240	.11
Tuley	283	.098
Amundsen	190	.008

Mount Greenwood elementary school accounted for 815 pounds of copper, brass, and bronze, the largest amount reported for any of the city's public grammar schools. The school was also highest on a per pupil basis, with nearly a one pound average.

The top 10 elementary schools follow:

Mount Greenwood	815	.954
Fulton	500	.791
Park Manor	764	.709
Eberhart	415	.598
Whitney	305	.488
Bartoff	275	.439
Sullivan	286	.410
Trumbull	460	.396
Lloyd	280	.356
Nobel	323	.337

It was estimated at the office of Salvage Director McFetridge that the city's 250 parochial schools collected approximately 175,000 pounds of scrap copper, brass, and bronze. The public schools, both elementary and high schools, were estimated to have accounted for a total of more than 400,000 pounds.

Heald Holds Six National Operational Posts.

Title of the south side's busiest war worker probably goes to Henry T. Heald, president of the Illinois Institute of Technology. In addition to serving nation's largest technical school, President Heald hold six posts actively affiliated with the conduct of the war.

Fulfilling these duties keeps the tall, dynamic college president in Washington much of the time. He attributes the smooth operation of the institute in his absence to the skill of members of his staff.

Naval Personnel Adviser.

One of the most important posts he holds is special adviser on training to the bureau of naval personnel, which has charge of the various navy "V" programs.

President Heald is a member of the American Council on Education's committee on the relationship of higher education to the federal government in the war effort. This group helped draft the army-navy education plan, and President Heald served on a subcommittee which worked out details of the plan.

He also is president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, which directs the activities of engineering schools. It is the responsibility of this body to meet the shortage of engineers. A compact curriculum and plan of uniform action has been worked out which has proved satisfactory to the army and navy.

On Tribune Honor Committee.

President Heald was selected as chairman of THE TRIBUNE'S war workers award committee, which each month honors a worker who has made a notable contribution to war industry. He is a consultant to the war man power commission.

The sixth post he holds is that of regional adviser to the United States office of education's engineering, science, and management war training program. He is adviser for region 14, which includes Illinois and southern Wisconsin.

Only 38 years old, Heald was named president of the institute in 1940 when it was formed by the consolidation of Armour institute and Lewis institute. He began his work at the school in 1927 as assistant professor of engineering at Armour institute.

Selected as Outstanding.

In 1940 he was the recipient of the Chicago Junior association distinguished service award, and received the same honor from the Illinois Junior Chamber of Commerce. The National Junior Association of Commerce selected him in 1940 as one of the 10 outstanding young men in the nation.

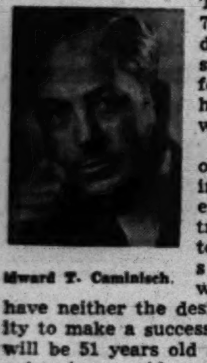
LAMP DESIGNER FINDS HAPPINESS IN NEW VOCATION

Makes Own Travel Films of American Scenes.

World War II. has changed an avocation into a vocation for Edward T. Caminisch of 7059 South Shore drive. And at the same time he has found complete happiness in his work.



Edward T. Caminisch.

Mr. Caminisch, one of the leading lamp designers in the country, transferred to another profession at an age when most men have neither the desire nor the ability to make a successful change. He will be 51 years old next month.

As vice president of a flourishing lamp company in Chicago, he traveled extensively in Europe. His camera went with him on all his trips and he photographed many European scenes.

Saw War Coming.

In 1937 he was in Germany and observed the Hitler régime. Every activity he saw in Europe indicated to him that war was on the way and that it appeared inevitable that the United States would be involved.

"As soon as I returned I felt that I had to get out of business," he said. He remembered the havoc World War I. created in his field. Lamp making is not classified as an essential industry in time of war and metals are very necessary in making lamps.

Soon after his return he resigned his position as vice president of the company. He gave no explanation.

Made Friends Wonder,

"This caused considerable consternation among my friends," he recalled with a smile. "Some believed that I had fallen in love and others were of the opinion I had gone completely crazy." He left Chicago and began to crystalize his plans for the future.

"I saw beauty in Europe," he explained, "but I believed there was beauty in this country." Changing his hobby into a business, Mr. Caminisch made it his task to record the beauty of the United States with his camera.

His first travel film dealt with the deep south. He recorded scenes at Natchez, the Evangeline and bayou country, and photographed the interiors of old southern homes.

Filmed Sioux Indians.

This film was made in 1940. Since that time he has filmed the Camino Real in California, between San Diego and Sonoma, and the Sioux Indians in South Dakota. It is his hope to make a film in each of the 48 states.

Mr. Caminisch's technique differs from that of others who make travel films in that he is director, cameraman, and narrator—which he believes gives a flexibility to his work.

In attacking a picture problem he studies the history of the section he is photographing in order to show the relation of the background and the people.

Studied at Art Institute.

Mr. Caminisch entered night school soon after the death of his father. He studied at the Art institute for 10 years and later took classes at the Academy of Fine Arts. After taking a job as an apprentice with a lithographing firm, he went with the lamp company in 1918, where he remained until 1940.

He recalled the quotation—"To do what you would rather do than anything else, and get paid for it; that is happiness."

"It's fun," was his summary.

This Week in the Garden

Monday, March 22

Many kinds of annuals and vegetables can be sown directly in a cold frame, but to be successful the requirements are [1] fine, moist soil; [2] thin sowing; [3] light covering; [4] careful watering; [5] abundant ventilation as soon as the plants appear above ground, and [6] early picking off to prevent overcrowding and the likelihood of damping off.

Seedlings are delicate to handle, but they quickly respond to good treatment. Do not allow them to stand after germination for any length of time, for they must have sufficient room to develop.

Tuesday, March 23

Seed will not germinate well in dry soil. Water the seedbed with a fine spray. Transplanted plants are more husky and have a much better root system than those taken directly from the seedbed.

Seedlings may be transplanted at least once into flats prior to setting in the field or garden. If it is necessary to buy a few started plants be sure to select the green, sturdy, vigorous stock.

Wednesday, March 24

Cuttings from plants grown indoors as house plants should continue if more stock for outdoor planting is wanted. Among these are the coleus, one of the most colorful and useful decorative foliage plants among those most usually grown.

Small 2½ inch plants can be purchased and grown until about May 20 when they can be planted out of doors. One of the most desirable golden leaved varieties is golden bedder, and the red leaved sort, verschaffeltii, also is excellent. They also may be grown from seed.

Thursday, March 25

Sweet peas should be sown as soon as the ground can be worked, for they like cool conditions. To sow, make a wide drill about three inches deep and sow at the rate of one pint of seed to 60 feet of drill.

Scatter the seed over the drill to avoid overcrowding; if they are crowded thin them out to give space for each plant. If more than one row is wanted, make the rows four feet apart.

Support with chicken wire or brush. This plant is well adapted to suburban sections because of the better atmospheric conditions and abundant sun. The soil should be well enriched. Mulch during hot weather to conserve the moisture.

Friday, March 26

Do not abandon the perennial borders, but continue to develop the plants to obtain maximum bloom. As soon as the plants show growth divide and replant the fast growing, spreading kinds, such as hardy asters, Oswego tea, Shasta daisies, false dragonhead, sweet William, phlox, and goldenglow.

If the plants have formed dense masses lift them, remove the soil, and replace them with fresh soil or give a good application of decayed manure.

Saturday, March 27

Practically all house plants may be shifted now. Use a soil consisting of one-half garden loam, one-quarter peat or leafmold, and one-quarter sand. Mix well together.

A four inch potful of commercial plant food may be incorporated in the mixture. Screen to remove large lumps. Use small pots or of a size that will be careful not to overpot. If old pots are used, clean them by soaking for 24 hours, then scrub clean.

Prepared in coöperation with Garfield park conservatory.

CHECK UP HOME NOW FOR NEEDED SPRING REPAIRS

Minor Weak Spots May Grow Like Weeds.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

In any pre-spring checkup of the interior of your house, most homes will reveal certain small weak spots that are minor enough in themselves, but which can grow like weeds and even drive the most poised of hostesses into apology complexes.

By this time the entrance hall may be showing signs of winter's wear and ravages, and if there are scuffed places on the floor around the threshhold it may not be necessary to revarnish the entire floor.

Clean, Sand and Varnish.

One can try a varnish patchup job first—that is if the varnish is not worn thru, but only scuffed and soiled. First, all surface soil should be removed with a damp cloth wrung out from mild soap suds and dried immediately. After this one can use a fine sandpaper and then apply a fresh coat of varnish. To prevent a "patched" look the varnish should be well brushed out at the edges.

If there are scratches in the varnish they can be removed by running turpentine into them and then rubbing them lightly. In case the wear has gone thru to the bare wood the same process can be followed, except that two or more coats of varnish probably will be needed for the refinishing work. If the varnish is in a definitely bad tate all over, it is best to remove what is left of the old finish and refinish from the bare wood floor.

By spring many a house is crying out for more storage space, closets, and shelves.

Enlarge Shallow Closets.

It may be that with a comparatively small investment in materials you can have all the closet space you need. Partitions can be removed from shallow closets, and double doors set a foot farther in the room. Then a full length mirror inside one door and plenty of rods and racks, and you have increased the general utility and size of the original closet.

Shelves are another clever space saver. In the living room there may be space between a fireplace and a jog in the wall where some extra small shelves can be tucked. Or the window sills may be very narrow and you can widen them with less effort than you think, so you've room for more potted greenery and blooming plants, or more space for books and magazines.

U. of C. Planning Mapping Courses for U. S. Service

Interviews for women and draft exempt men who wish to enroll in two tuition-free courses in mapping at the University of Chicago, in preparation for government service, will start Friday evening in Rosenwald hall, 58th street, west of University avenue. Both courses, which may be taken together, begin March 30.

The courses are photogrammetry, the interpretation of aerial photographs, and topographic map making. Offered under the United States office of education's engineering, science, and management war training program, they are designed to equip map experts for service with government map agencies in Washington, D. C., and elsewhere.

Prepare for Civil Service.

Courses will fit graduates for civil service ratings at salaries ranging from $1,440 to $1,800 yearly, the rating to depend partly on individual background and the qualifications of those taking the work. Both courses will be given in daytime and evening sections.

Instruction in photogrammetry will be headed by Dr. Francis Pettijohn, associate professor of geology. Instructors in topographic map making include Henry M. Leppard, associate professor of geography, and Everett C. Olson, assistant professor of geography.

Other Interview Hours.

In addition to the interview period Friday evening prospective students may also apply for admisison from 2 to 5 o'clock on Saturday and from 7 to 9 o'clock Monday evening, March 29.

High school graduation is the only requirement for the map drafting course; prerequisites for the photogrammetry course are two years of college training with major study in either engineering, architecture, physics, chemistry, mathematics, forestry, geography, or geology; or three years of college training if the student has had high school trigonometry or mechanical drawing.

RALLIES TO SPUR SALVAGE DRIVES

Smith Funk of Tilden Leads City Corps.

Smith A. Funk, son of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond A. Funk, 7557 South Shore drive, newly chosen colonel and commander of the entire Chicago R. O. T. C., of more than eleven thousand members, will perform in his new capacity for the first time Saturday at the annual drill competition for R. O. T. C. units.

Cadet Funk and his staff of 10, chosen in competitive examinations a week ago, will have charge of a review at the close of the competition, in which picked platoons from 27 high schools will participate.

Drills Start at 9 A. M.

The drills will be held in the armory of the 1st regiment, Illinois Reserve militia, at Kedzie and North avenue, beginning at 9 o'clock in the morning and with the last drill set for 2 o'clock in the afternoon. They will be free to the public.

Cadets from Harper, Du Sable, and Bowen High schools are on the corps staff, which was announced as follows:

Has Academic, R. O. T. C. Record.

Cadet Col. Funk has been outstanding in academic and R. O. T. C. work thru all his four years at Tilden. He was graduated from Myra Bradwell Elementary school, 7710 Burnham avenue, in 1939, and entered the Tilden R. O. T. C. the next fall.

Scholastically, he ranks 11th in a class of 421. He is a member of the Honor club and of the National Honor society and has attended three achievement dinners for high ranking students.

Funk has been lieutenant colonel and commanding officer of the Tilden cadet unit, which has a brilliant record of placing first for the last two years both in the city platoon drill competition and in federal R. O. T. C. inspection in the corps area. He has served both semesters this year.

Winner of Tribune Medal.

The youth has been awarded four medals for cadet efficiency, including the Chicago Tribune gold medal, neatest cadet medal, and competitive platoon drill medal, all in 1941, and the American Legion officers' efficiency medal last January. Also, he has won four rifle marksmanship medals and four marksmanship bars awarded by the National Rifle association.

He was commander of the Tilden color guard which functioned on the W-G-N R. O. T. C. night program Feb. 20.

Funk hopes to go to West Point and make a career of the army.

Judges will rank the first 10 platoons in Saturday's competition on the basis of precision and appearance, and awards will be made accordingly. The schedule for the day follows:

Lake View to Lead Off.

SOUTHWEST WORKER SELLS WAR BONDS TO 30; WINS 'V' AWARD

Gus H. Konstantelos, 3317 Emerald avenue, was one of the first five Minute Men to win a "V" corps award for selling to 30 war bond purchasers within the first 10 days of the cruiser Chicago campaign, the treasury department has announced.

Peter Rozdilsky, 2300 West 51st street, a member of the southwest division of Minute Men was the first in the city to complete his zone. He had turned in all his assignments, but when the cruiser campaign started, he asked for more, and now is selling war bonds to new customers.

Division 3, southwest side, has been in the lead of all divisions from the start.

Cactus Club Members Find Desert Plant Adds Beauty to City Life

From the barren wastes of the southwest, the cactus has become a city sophisticate, dwelling unruffled among apartment house occupants and challenging the imagination of its owners with strange forms, textures, colors, moods, and blooms. Mrs. Christian F. Radden, 10226 Bell avenue, has a greenhouse given over entirely to 500 specimens. A member of the Chicago Cactus and Succulent club, she holds a prize plant, the golden barrel, or echinocactus.

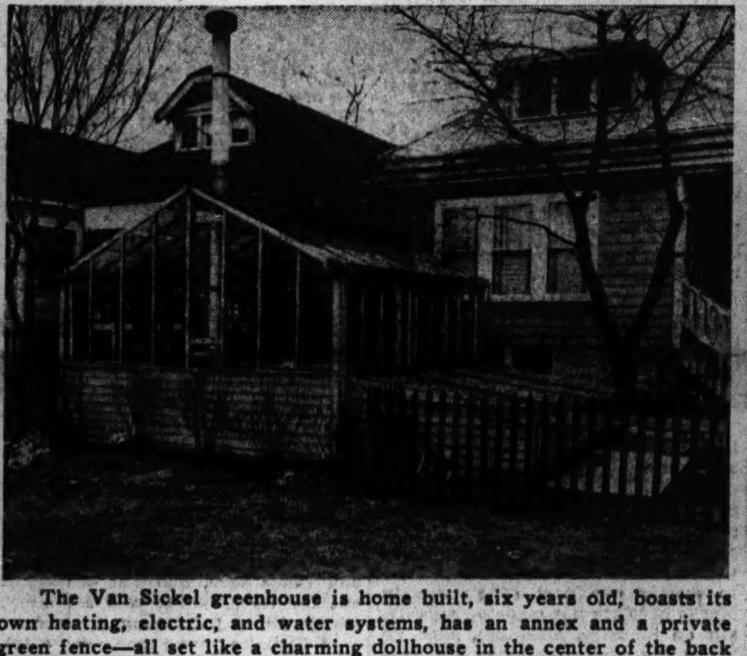
Species of night blooming cerei are found in the greenhouse of Robert Van Sickel, 7728 Calumet avenue, a shop superintendent, whose success as a cactus hobbyist is admired by fellow members in the Cactus and Succulent society. The vine climbing Villbergia nutans, which has six inch blossoms in summer, is supported by an indoor trellis. All specimens are properly labeled with metal or wood tabs.



The Van Sickel greenhouse is home built, six years old, boasts its own heating, electric, and water systems, has an annex and a private green fence—all set like a charming dollhouse in the center of the back yard. Summer finds the cacti in the annex enjoying the sun and rain, with sloping roof sections removed.

It was in 1872, when Chicago was still smoke stained and bewildered after the great fire of the previous year, that the Catholic Casino male chorus was organized. During this period of reconstruction, seven civic minded parishioners of St. Francis of Assisi church, 1206 Newberry avenue, saw a way to safeguard the religious and social welfare of the community by founding an organization which would exemplify the best in choral singing with its attendant good fellowship. So the group got together in the parish hall and formed the Casino chorus.

The little organization grew with unexpected suddenness. Rapidly its membership became city-wide. Doctors, lawyers, butchers, and bankers —men representing all professions, trades, and nationalities—gathered to blend lusty voices at the Casino song fests.

Must Love Singing.

There were only two membership requirements. They were a love of singing and the quality of being a "good fellow." A nonprofit organization, the 71 year old chorus has constantly served its members and the public with the same hearty good fellowship which colors its Tuesday night meetings at 811 Oakdale avenue.

Singing at a wedding or a funeral for a member or friend of the organization is regarded as an important duty by all other members.

Thruout its existence, the Casino has repeatedly furnished musical concerts to cheer the hearts of inmates of hospitals, orphanages and old people's homes. The organization has supplied choral music for religious institutions on special feast days, jubilees, and dedications. It has always stood ready to lend voices in sacred or secular music to honor a church or civic dignitary.

Sing in W-G-N Programs.

The group also sings on the Chicagoland church hour over W-G-N and has taken part in a number of W-G-N Christmas programs. A standing engagement is the singing of a requiem mass at St. Joseph's cemetery every Decoration day.

The Casino now has more than 60 members who come faithfully to the weekly meetings. Some of the older members are walking with canes, but their voices still retain much of the quality they had as young men. In many instances there are fathers singing beside their sons.

Member 50 Years.

One of the oldest members and a former director of the chorus is Henry Detmer of 7751 Emerald avenue. Mr. Detmer, a retired manufacturer, was chorus director for five years—50 years ago. He comes every week to take his place in the base section of the group. And he always stays for the talk fests, later in the evening, when old friends just sit around over sandwiches and coffee.

Present director of the chorus is Gregory Konold, who also directs the glee club at Loretto High school, 6541 Stewart avenue. Mr. Konold succeeded Capt. Adalbert Huguelet to the Casino directorship. Capt. Huguelet entered the army last fall and is now overseas.

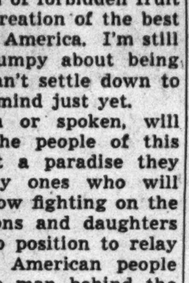
Nazareth Lutheran Pastor to Talk at Loop Service

The Rev. Herbert Kohn, pastor of Nazareth Lutheran church, 60th street and Spaulding avenue, will be the speaker at the third midweek Lenten service conducted from 12:10 to 12:40 o'clock Wednesday in the Central Y. M. C. A. auditorium, 19 South La Salle street, under auspices of the Lutheran Bureau, Inc.

The War as Our Fighters See It

From Walter L. DeVinck, electrician's mate, 2d class, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. August DeVinck, 2212 Sherman avenue, Evanston. DeVinck, in the navy since December, 1938, was at Pearl Harbor, participated in four naval battles in one of which his ship was sunk. After being on a small island for a week the survivors were picked up and taken to Australia. DeVinck made the trip to America on an oil tanker.

Everything here [America] is like an unbelievable dream, for I've spent so much time convincing myself that I'd never reach the United States again until after the war.



Walter L. DeVinck.

"The food is like —— well my first meal was so good for a change from those I'd eaten over there that tears of appreciation and thanksgiving were really hard to hold back. I can safely say that you can smell the difference in the air alone, taste America in everything you eat.

"It's absolutely incredible to notice such tremendous differences between the quality of things you hear, see, smell, feel, etc., here and in other lands. Mother, I sincerely believe that there was a garden of forbidden fruit —a God's special creation of the best which we now call America. I'm still so nervous and jumpy about being here that I just can't settle down to a normal state of mind just yet.

"Words, written or spoken, will never reveal to the people of this country just what a paradise they live in. The only ones who will realize are those now fighting on the war fronts—the sons and daughters who are now in no position to relay the facts that all American people should know. The man behind the man behind the gun is the one on whom we depend to win this war.

"Man, what a treat; desks to write on, soft lounge chairs, good radio programs, soda fountains, canteens, cokes, clean shower rooms, plenty of liberty, and time off and beautiful women are all over the place. The first pretty girl I saw on the train going across the bridge to the city looked so welcome to my eyes that I wanted to stare at her.

"I feel like some one who is getting a new start in life—a new chance to survive. I'm happy again."

From Corp Robert E. Witt to his "Dear Mom"—Mrs. Edna Witt, 3735 Bosworth avenue. Corp. Witt, member of a coast artillery unit, was reported missing in action after the fall of Corregidor in May, 1942. His mother believes Corp. Witt to be a prisoner of the Japs.

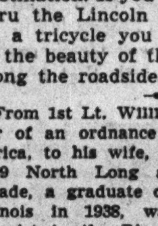
"I may be a little early for this but you can keep this part of the letter on file for when I get home. Here 'tis, the first dinner I would like to have you cook for me after I get off the train. Of course I'll want . . . over to eat with me and you can invite any one you wish to but—ah, yes—the menu.

Robert E. Witt.

"Let's see now, nice pork roast, mashed potatoes and gravy, pickles and olives, waldorf salad, creamed wax beans, applesauce, sweet potatoes and a pineapple juice drink. For dessert, coffee, one of your chocolate layer cakes [is three layers too much?], one of grandma's and one of Aunt Anna's apple pies and a big dish of chocolate pudding with lots of whipped cream. Do you think it's possible or am I asking too much?"

From Corp. Edward Kennelly, infantry regiment medical detachment, in Hawaii, to his friend, James W. Conklin, 5967 North Oconto avenue. Corp. Kennelly married Miss Carlotta Nelson of Park Ridge shortly before he sailed. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin M. Kennelly, 5647 North Harlem avenue. Corp. Kennelly is a graduate of St. Ignatius High school.

"The islands are a revelation and a disappointment. My literary perusals had led me to expect too much. When the island first appeared out of the mists of the sea, a brilliant emerald mound rising like a green felt poker table from the very lap of Neptune, it was the picture that I had always held in my mind of what Ireland would be like, lush, abundant, fertile greenness, moist and always the softly rolling sea.



Edward Kennelly.

"I had expected hot sands, bamboo trees, and towering coconuts. Of course they are all growing here but not in the amount that you would expect. And I can assure you no Hedy Tondelayo in brilliant sarong offered to make 'tiffin' for me. As a matter of fact what most of the kids wear here might be called a modified zoot suit, sans shoes, of course.

"When we disembarked we were loaded into trucks and sent to our destination. If you can imagine a tour thru the Lincoln park conservatory on a tricycle you have a faint idea of the beauty of the glorious flowers along the roadside.

From 1st Lt. William G. Meade, member of an ordnance company in North Africa, to his wife, Mrs. Louise Meade, 1109 North Long avenue, Oak Park. Meade, a graduate of the University of Illinois in 1938, was employed as a chemist in the Riverdale works of the Acme Steel company, until he entered the army in May, 1941.

The days are hot and the nights are cold. The dust is terrific and when it does rain—which is seldom—it

TRIBUNE WILL PRINT 3 DETAILED LETTERS FROM YANKS WEEKLY

The War As Fighters See It department provides a medium wherein letters from service men and service women received by relatives and friends may have a wider circle of appreciative readers.

That more space may be given to letters which, because of their interest, merit more than excerpts, but three letters will be selected for publication each week. The briefest of letters, however, will be given equal consideration. Even the postal card message may contain a nugget of originality. For each letter printed in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, $5 will be paid the sender.

Senders of letters are asked to comply with the following suggestions:

Send COPIES of the treasured letters, do NOT send the originals. Do not send framed photographs or scrapbooks. THE TRIBUNE cannot be responsible for letters lost in transmission, nor return the letters.

Photographs of the letter writer and a brief biography of the writer are desired. Those requesting return of the pictures should write the request and address on the back of the pictures, but THE TRIBUNE regrets that it cannot accept responsibility for such return.

Prickly Cacti Are Flowers to These Folk

BY IRENE PONTO.

The Chicago branch of the Cactus and Succulent Society of America was organized three years ago by Frank Kranz, 7640 South Lowe avenue, assistant florist foreman at Marquette park, who formerly had been in charge of the cactus room at Garfield park conservatory. Semi-scientific in nature, the club has a monthly bulletin of articles describing varieties and care of cacti.

Scientific terms roll easily off the tongues of members at the biweekly Tuesday evening sessions held in the gold room of Garfield park conservatory. Few cactus plants have had their botanical names popularized, and cactophiles must struggle in conversation with lengthy Latin names, of which prowess they are secretly proud.

As is true of many things, the cactus may be viewed thru appreciative or unfriendly eyes. Mrs. Christian F. Radden, 10226 Bell avenue, who built a greenhouse last June exclusively for her cacti, started her acquaintance with the cacti by remarking, when a friend suggested they view the cactus display at a flower show:

"What, those ugly things? Dear me, no!"

Exhibit Changed Her Mind.

Led encouragingly, however, to the exhibit, she was entranced with the cactus' own stature as a plant and its amazing ability to simulate pebbles, baskets, cotton fluff, a bishop's cap, white rock, mushrooms, and modern skyscrapers. Today, Mrs. Radden, owner of 500 specimens, has the authoritative cactus text by Britten and Rose, holds informal lectures in her greenhouse, and holds membership in the cactus society and garden department of the Beverly Hills Woman's club.

Fifteen years ago Robert Van Sickel, 7728 Calumet avenue, saw cacti in bloom in Saskatchewan. Today, added to a private greenhouse for his varieties and rare plants, he is a photographic experimenter with miniature cactus arrangements for a stereoscope.

The Cactus and Succulent club has won ribbons at flower shows in Hamilton and Ridge park. At the Hamilton park show, when a night blooming variety promised to unfold spectacularly around midnight, interested persons drew up chairs, some one played a piano, and all waited for the flower's debut, Kranz said.

Southwest Is Mecca.

Sooner or later a cactophile will travel to the southwest or to Mexico to see cacti in their native habitat. He returns loaded with plants or photographic records of them, and a fund of questions that send him searching thru new catalogs and texts. The club has taken all day trips to see the collection of Arthur Blocher in Amboy, Ill., to view Milwaukee, Wis., collections, and has attended a cactus convention at the Missouri botanical gardens,

Mrs. Eugene Berry, 1620 West 102d place, has species of epiphyllum and zygocactus in her private greenhouse, and Kranz, whose speciality is grafting, has the rare plant, Rebutia senilis, grafted to a base, Selinocereus Boeckmannii. This year all members received tiny cuttings of cacti to raise under varying conditions of temperature, soil, and water. Next year they will report upon the results, and the secretary, Mrs. Cornelia Hunter, 8954 South Oglesby avenue, will be able to compile accurate data for future cactophiles.

Y.W.C.A. CENTER TO FETE YOUTHS ON NIGHT SHIFT

Prepares Fun, Supper Night Owl Parties.

"Night owl" parties for young night shift workers looking for a good time after they quit work at midnight will be held every Wednesday night at the Stockyards center of the Y. W. C. A., according to Elsabelle Goss, industrial secretary. The parties are open to both men and girls.

Starting at 11 o'clock in the evening and continuing until 4 o'clock in the morning, the entertainment offered will include roller skating, dancing to juke box music, ping pong, and volleyball. Supper will feature the parties at the center, 4856 South Ashland boulevard.

Need After Hours Fun.

"Night shift workers need their fun after hours just as much as any other young people," Miss Goss said. "Their lives are turned topsy turvy; they work while most other people sleep, and they lose out on many good times and wholesome recreation."

Workers from the packing houses and from other industrial plants in the southwest area are invited to the parties. Guests will include punch press operators, welders, and packers.

Daily Swim Session.

Night shift workers who start to work in the afternoon may attend a swimming class at the Valentine Boys' club pool, 3400 South Emerald avenue, at 12:45 o'clock each afternoon.

Beverly Y Cage Team to Play in Morgan Park

Two basketball games will be played at 7:30 o'clock Friday evening in the Morgan Park Methodist church gymnasium by four teams from the Beverly Y. M. C. A. Basketball champions chosen last week from among boys in the 12 and under age group will play an all-star team in the same classification. The second game will be played by similar teams in the 13 and over group.

Medical Auxiliary.

The Woman's auxiliary to the Polish Medical society will meet at noon Tuesday, April 6, in the Georgian room of Carson Pirie Scott & Co. Mrs. E. H. Warszewski, 1238 Noble street, is president of the auxiliary.

ASK 20 PER CENT INCREASE IN TIN CANS AND FATS

Session Wednesday in Grand Crossing.

With the aim of increasing by 20 per cent the salvage of tin cans and the conservation of grease and fats in OCD division 2, a series of meetings is scheduled for the 25 communities of the area. The first meeting will be at 8 o'clock Wednesday for the Grand Crossing community at Grand Crossing park.

Other objectives of the meetings—open to any resident of the community where they are held—will be to increase the planting of war gardens and the use of the consumer information service by 100 per cent over last year. Designed to dramatize the community service phase of civilian defense, the meetings will be sponsored by the community commanders, the salvage, conservation, war garden, and consumer information chairman of each of the communities.

The series of meetings will be conducted by W. J. McDillon, division chairman of salvage and conservation; Ernest Gries, division war garden chairman, and Mrs. Ruth Smith, division consumer information chairman.

Save 10 Tons Weekly.

Mr. McDillon estimated that 20,000 pounds of grease and fats were being saved weekly in his division. Since August, he said, there have been approximately 800,000 pounds of tin cans salvaged. No figures were available on the use of the consumer information service and the growing of war gardens last year.

Stressing the need for conservation of grease and fats, Mr. McDillon said the United States stockpile of glycerine was now 20 million pounds "in the red." Pointing out that almost the entire supply of tin formerly came from Malaya—now under Japanese control—he emphasized the need for saving tin cans by reporting that only 44 tons of tin were produced in the nation last year. "The undoubted shortage of food we are facing," he said, "points to the need of increasing garden acreage."

Dates of other community meetings will be announced when the schedule is completed. Communities in which the meetings will be held include: Ada, Auburn Park, Avalon Park, Beverly, Brainard, Calumet Heights, Chatham, Chesterfield, East Side, Fernwood, Gresham, Hegewisch, Morgan Park, Mount Greenwood, Pullman, Riverdale, Roseland, Russell Square, South Chicago, South Deering, South Shore, Stony Island Park, Washington Heights, and West Pullman.

To Exhibit War Products.

At the Grand Crossing meeting war products, sluch as ammunition and products, such as ammunition and salvage materials from which they can be made. The differences between rubber and synthetic rubber will be illustrated. Fats and greases will be set beside glycerin, most essential to explosives, which is derived from the fats and greases.

Meetings in other communities will follow the same pattern, Mr. McDillon said. After the demonstrations of the need for the materials and the methods of collection questions may be asked from the floor.

Walter Feldhoff is community commander of Grand Crossing. Salvage efforts are directed by Mrs. Kathryn J. Millis. Mrs. Ruby Speakman is conservation chairman; Mrs. Mary Alm is consumer information chairman, and Bernard Thompson heads war garden activities.

Mr. McDillon reported that altho all residents were invited the meetings would be of special benefit to block wardens of the four services.

THREE NEW WAR PLANTS ARRIVE IN BLUE ISLAND

Use All Factory Space in Southwest Suburb.

Blue Island, southwest suburb of 17,000 population, has become host to three new industries within the last six months, Mayor John M. Hart proudly announced.

The companies, all of which are related directly or indirectly to aviation, are the Cardox corporation, manufacturers of fire extinguishing equipment and liquid; the Vapo Fire corporation, combustion machinery and pressure valves; and the Wickwire Spencer Aviation corporation, a subsidiary of the Wickwire Spencer Steel company, which makes a new automatic variable pitch propeller in Blue Island.

"We are with industry," Mayor Hart declared last week. "We have welcomed industry and tried to cooperate in every way." He said that with the arrival of the new firms no factory space now was available in Blue Island. "Any new company coming in here would have to build," Hart said.

City Clears Title to Land.

The city council recently adopted an ordinance to vacate a strip of land along Minnesota avenue and Wahl street, at the corner occupied by the former machinery warehouse of the Pronger Brothers Construction company. The Cardox corporation, which will start to use the building this spring, discovered the brick building stood several feet over the property line. By its action, the city cleared title to the land for the company.

Fire and police protection problems have been worked out coöperatively with Blue Island civic authorities and representatives of the factories.

Make Airport Fire Trucks.

The small Cardox factory of about 50 workmen will produce a custom built fire truck for military airports. Merrill G. Marshall, 1811 East 72d street, manager of the truck department in the general offices at 307 North Michigan avenue, assisted in research work on the vehicle in the Monee plant of the Cardox corporation.

Gunnar Taube, 8610 Blackstone avenue, will be the general superintendent, and business and accounting offices of the truck production department will be at the Blue Island plant.

The Vapo Fire company, 11957 Vincennes avenue, Blue Island, started operations about six weeks ago, according to Ralph M. Henderson, secretary. Its office and manufacturing plant were located for the last 14 years at 2807 South Michigan avenue.

Flossmoor Resident Heads Firm.

Mark C. Bates, Flossmoor, is president of the Vapo Fire company, and other officers are W. T. Kitchen, La Grange, vice president; H. D. Steinberg, 409 East 72d street, vice president in charge of engineering; and J. S. Anderson, 7209 South Michigan avenue, treasurer.

The Vapo Fire company will be one of two factories in the country to manufacture a high pressure steel plug valve used in making high octane gasoline. The valves are on the WPB list of critical articles.

Occupying the former plant of the Borden company, which was built 8 years ago, the Vapo Fire company is housed in an attractive building painted white and black in the factory interior and buff in the offices. Fluorescent lighting is used in the strictly modern machine shop, and the building is all power ventilated. All machinery, Henderson said, is individually motorized. When the company goes into a second work shift, it will employ from 75 to 100 skilled workmen.

Plan for Peace Time, Too.

Three years ago, when Wickwire developed an automatic variable pitch propeller for a small airplane, there was no intention of developing a propeller for war use, Joe Stites, 11059 Hoyne avenue, general manager of the Blue Island plant, said. The propeller is used on training planes. It is no war baby, however, and will be built in peacetime for small ships.

It is expected that propellers will be shipped from Blue Island this month. The company, located in its old subsidiary plant, that of the American Wire Fabrics, 2350 West 136th street, hopes to employ local men and needs at present skilled machinists and machine operators, according to Stites.

Chicago Air Cadet Writes Song Giving Pilots Praise

Robert W. Boyer, son of Mrs. George Boyer, 6830 South LaFayette avenue, who is stationed at the air base, Miami Beach, Fla., has written a song which has caught on with his fellow cadets. The stanzas express the courage and loyalty of American pilots—"When we fight we chuckle at defeat."

CHANUTE OPENS A NEW DOOR TO SKILLFUL HANDS

BY ROSCOE SIMMONS.

Chanute, Ill., March 20.—Chanute field, one of the most famous of American air training bases, is more campus than camp. It is school and college, a university of specialization. It is heart of the army air forces technical command, altho headquarters of the command is in Knollwood, N. C.

Situated almost mid-Illinois, the sweep of its acres, the architecture of countless buildings, the earnest demeanor of its student soldiers, all speak the spirit of this laboratory of flight.

Here assemble American youth, without distinction as to race or color, to study side by side how to keep fighting ships in the air. Without Chanute and its dozen sister schools, the epic story of American air fighters could not be told.

Trainees Picked for Aptitude.

Trainees reach Chanute not by their own choice, but because they were picked from their units for aptness; as fit to go on with higher technical knowledge required to "keep 'em flying." Here those who study flying almost never fly.

Chanute is representative of the integration of every creed and color and race into the unanimity of war. It is so with the student body and so with its "faculty."

Glamour of the military camp—drill, marching, music—is missing here. Nor are the skies over Chanute filled with ships. But as a technical command Chanute cannot possibly be second to any similar center in a world of war.

Send Ships Up Right.

The stirring motto of the army air forces training—SUSTINEO ALAS—was repeated to a colored [soldier] student. "I know," he said, "but I was never much on Latin, but I'll do my best to send the ships up right, and if they're downed I'll send 'em right back up all right again."

Subjects taught include parachute rigging, link trainer [where those who teach flying themselves may not know how to fly], teletype machinery, sheet metal, welding, heat treating, electrical devices, instruments of the earth and the heavens, special purpose vehicles, and the weather.

"God's Chilluns Got Wings."

One of the many colored boys, shaping an after-the-war career for machinery, was reminded of the English version of the command's motto—"I Sustain the Wings." "Well," he said, "since all God's chilluns got wings, I ought to be good working with 'em."

Every day is Commencement day at Chanute and the graduates are dispatched to ground centers stretching across the land. Each student studies to become expert on one thing; seeks to master one part of an airship. Marks here are not made on ancestry but on industry, attention, aptitude. When the graduates move out, they may turn up even in places where custom never expected to see them.

Some may be surprised to learn that colored instructors teach at Chanute, instruct some of the most difficult courses. But you see the colored instructors in every shop, surrounded by white and colored students. One colored instructor, Ernest Curtis, native of Springfield, Ill., was himself a student at Chanute. Within a year he was student and teacher.

Other Colored Instructors.

Other colored instructors at Chanute include Earl W. Smith, teletype; Robert Dickson, heat treating; Thomas Hopkins, welding; Wyatt Isabell, electrical division; M. D. Lee, link trainer, and Kenneth Brooks, sheet metal. The army never tells all, but many things one may see for himself.

The 99th Pursuit Squadron, composed of colored flyers, was once stationed at Chanute. Necessity of war sent them to other fields and duties. The squadron no doubt felt regret at leaving the command of Brig. Gen. R. E. O'Neill, commanding officer at Chanute, who had said of all his boys: "I will see you thru in keeping with military necessity, with our war aims, and what is just."

Going and coming is endless here, and tomorrow may bring back the 99th or two or three squadrons. As elsewhere, discipline is doing its work at Chanute. Many of the boys call Chanute an opportunity.

Opens a New Door.

The big name at Chanute, as elsewhere in the technical training command, is that of Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, its commander. He stirs the imagination of youth.

"Yes sir," he said, "I'm reading about Gen. Weaver, my countryman, our high man." He then added: "Gen. Weaver opened a new door to me, he and Uncle Sam, and I'm beating it out for them." That was his story, deeper far in looks than in words.

At Chanute young men with a talent are forgetting little things. "Look," said a colored boy to me, "I'm in the army and college at the same time. This is worth fighting for."

NEW PLAYGROUND TO COST $15,000 AT 118TH, CALUMET

The city council recently authorized the spending of $15,000 for installation of a new playground at 118th street and Calumet avenue. The work will be done and the playground will be operated by the city bureau of parks. The playground will serve an area where other recreational facilities are scarce. It will be located on a city owned triangular piece of land, measuring 632 by 554 by 817 feet.

Grading will be started as soon as weather permits. Plans call for a play lot for small children; a hard baseball diamond, two softball diamonds, four horseshoe courts, a sand box, a circular wading pool with a spray in the center, and various playground equipment including a "jungle gym," swings, and slides. War restrictions probably will delay installation of metal equipment, however, it was reported.

The work may take two months, and the area is expected to be ready for use by early summer.

NORMAN GLASSES
Busy war workers demand the best in safety, comfort and sharp vision. That's why so many of them, beginners and veterans, wear glasses from Norman's—in regular or 69%-harder-than-regular lenses—with shockproof mountings.

The above scene was suggested by a visit to a war plant on Chicago's great Southwest Side. It shows how our men and women are doing their part in the war of production.

IN WARTIME, AMERICA NEEDS TRIM, ENERGETIC WOMEN!

Don't Be Fat!

Reduce this proved way that requires no strict diet lists— No exercises— No harmful drugs

Lovely Radio Star, Irene Rich, 2nd Lieutenant in Women's Ambulance & Defense Corps of America, now past 40, weighs the same as she did at 18. She recommends the easy Welch Way to reduce.

READ AMAZING FACTS: Today, thousands of patriotic American women are discovering a remarkably effective way to lose ugly, sluggish fat! To thus have that trim, "active look" and alert, peppy feeling so important today! It's easy! Merely mix ¾ glass* Welch's Grape Juice with ¼ glass* water—drink before meals and at bedtime. Then what amazing action follows! First: You have less desire to eat sweet, fattening foods—thus cutting down caloric intake. Second: Natural dextrose in Welch's is quickly consumed. This regime actually helps Nature consume excess fat! Builds quick-energy, too! Thus you look better—feel better! Have more of the pep you need in wartime! Start reducing the Welch Way today! *8-oz. glass

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent and author of "Queen of the Flat Tops," will be a guest of Bob Becker on his program over W-G-N at 3 p. m. today. Johnston will tell about dogs that go to sea and dogs he has seen in battle. Becker will also give a report on the army's sentry dog training program at Fort Robinson, Nebraska.

W-G-N's new chief of production, Lewis James, has been in radio as a tenor since 1921. He's one of the real old timers. For a decade from 1926 to 1936 he was featured with the Revelers, probably the best known of all radio quartets.

What was formerly the Ben Bernie show on CBS, because of the illness of the Old Maestro, is now "Keep the Home Fires Burning," a program of relaxing music, addressed mainly to workers in war plants. Jack Fulton Jr., formerly tenor soloist on the show, has gone east and is singing with Bob Crosby's orchestra.

Something new at W-G-N is the feminine sound effects technician. First of her sex to undertake this rôle at the station is Genevieve Capstaff. W-G-N is feeling the man power pinch. Approximately 50 per cent of the station's male personnel, as of Dec. 7, 1941, has enlisted for service in the army, navy, or answered the call for other war duties.

The National Association of Broadcasters will hold a conference at the Palmer House from April 27 to 29 to consider the rôle of domestic radio stations with regard to the war effort. Government officials will be on hand to let the broadcasters hear their viewpoints.

Brings Greetings

Mark Love brings greetings from Chicagoland boys in training camps thruout the country at 10 o'clock Sunday mornings over W-G-N.

HUTCHINS TO BE SPEAKER TODAY ON ROUND TABLE

President Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago will appear on the U. of C. Round Table at 1 o'clock this afternoon over WMAQ-NBC. The topic, "Education for Freedom," was selected in coöperation with the American Association of School Administrators now holding its annual convention "by air" because of the war. The Round Table will discuss the rôle of liberal education in war time, the training programs o fthe services, including those to be established in colleges, and the plight of small liberal arts colleges. Other speakers will be Lt. Comm. Alvin McKean and Ralph Tyler.

'Are You Kidding' to Be First Nighter Production

A comedy entitled "Are You Kidding?" starring Barbara Luddy and Les Tremayne, will be presented on the First Nighter program at 5 p. m. today on W-G-N and the Mutual network. In keeping with the spring mood the comedy tells of a carefree, romantic young lady who drops her steady for a blind date.

Post-War Topic.

The subject, "Can Free Enterprise Carry the Post-War Load?" will be discussed on Wake Up, America at 2:15 p. m. today over WENR-Blue.

'BITTERSWEET' IS NEXT OPERETTA IN AIR THEATER

Noel Coward's "Bittersweet" will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday over W-G-N and Mutual Marion Claire will be starred.

Miss Claire will be supported by of Sari Linden. The rôle is a familiar one to Miss Claire. She appeared in the stage presentation of the operetta and has sung the rôle before on Theater of the Air productions.

Miss Claire will be supported by an augmented chorus, a cast of well known radio actors to play the speaking rôles, and the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber. Robert Trendler will direct the chorus.

All the familiar Coward songs, "I'll See You Again," "Tokay," "Zigeuner," "Call of Life," and "Small Café," will be presented.

NBC Symphony to Present D. Milhaud's Symphony

Leopold Stokowski and the NBC Symphony orchestra will present Darius Milhaud's Symphony at 4 o'clock this afternoon over WMAQ-NBC. The work is in four parts: "Pastoral," "Tres Vif," "Tres Modere," and "Final." Another works will be Stokowski's own symphonic transcription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Madeleine Carroll to Star on Reader's Digest Today

Madeleine Carroll, movie actress, will be starred in "A Letter to My Last Husband" on Radio Reader's Digest at 8 o'clock tonight over WBBM-CBS. H. V. Kaltenborn will discuss important phases of the war. Conrad Nagel will be master of ceremonies.

MURAL PAINTINGS AT COOK SCHOOL TO BE DEDICATED

Idea Suggested 5 Years Ago Is Carried Thru.

Three handsome murals mounted on the west wall of the assembly hall at John W. Cook elementary school, 82d and Bishop streets, will be dedicated Tuesday, April 20, according to Miss Irene Maguire, 6440 South Minerva avenue, principal.

The 8½x16 foot murals were painted by Jefferson League, a member of the art faculty at Lane Technical High school, and were executed thru joint efforts of the John W. Cook PTA and the Works Progress administration. The idea for the murals was proposed five years ago by Mrs. Edward Kohlman, 8420 South Hermitage avenue, president of the PTA at that time. Gilbert H. Wilkinson, now retired, was principal.

Music, Recreation, Art.

A mural committee of past presidents of the Cook PTA was organized, and the plan for three panels to depict music, recreation, art, and literature was presented to the board of education and the WPA. After approval was secured, sketches were submitted to the Cook PTA, and three years ago the artist started actual painting of the murals.

Mrs. William O. Roessler, 8247 South Ada street, has served as chairman of the PTA mural committee. Besides Mrs. Kohlmann, other members included Mrs. Andrew C. Graham, 2904 Wilson avenue, and Mrs. Phillip M. Stink, 8224 South Laflin street. Mrs. Frank Rickerson, 8012 South Marshfield avenue, now PTA student aid chairman, acted as finance chairman of the committee. The cost of materials, approximately $200, was met by the PTA.

Sports by Seasons.

A popular summer spot, the wading pool at Foster Park, is depicted in the recreation mural. A boy with toy sailboat, a girl with jumping rope, a baseball player, a pole vaulter, and the perennial sidewalk game of spring—one-two-three, O'Leary—are seen in the mural, together with a farmer-clad boy and his Jack o' Lantern at Halloween, suggesting autumn, and a mound of snowballs for the winter season.

Mother Goose dominates the music panel, which shows the first grade's rhythm band, an end man from the PTA minstrel show, the march of two wooden soldiers, a girl drum major, colonial days, scenes from "Madame Butterfly" and Deadeye Dick from "H. M. S. Pinafore," and the school orchestra.

The third panel encompasses art, literature, and history. Hiawatha, Rip Van Winkle, Ichabod Crane, "Little Women," portray literature as do Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn whitewashing a fence. Washington and Lincoln are historical characters within the painting, and art is represented by a young artist at her easel and students modeling pottery.

Murals Adorn Assembly Hall of Cook School

500 IN THORNTON HIGH INVOLVED AFTER SCHOOL

Almost 20 per cent of the 2,800 students of Thornton Township High school, Harvey, are at work after school hours, it was shown last week by a survey conducted by Miss Elizabeth Carr, chairman of the faculty health committee. Both boys and girls were included in the survey, which accounted for 505 students working after school.

While the students are indirectly aiding the war as well as themselves by helping to make up labor shortages, Miss Carr said, they must also maintain their health and their scholastic standards.

Several of the students are working only two hours a week, while at the other extreme three boys are working 56 hours weekly. More than a fourth of the students work at night, but only 9 per cent work more than 40 hours. Three thousand former students at Thornton High school are estimated by Miss Mae Sexauer of the faculty to be serving in the army, navy, marines, coast guard, and merchant marine.

PUPILS OF POPE SCHOOL BUY $3,837 BONDS FOR SHIP

Children of the Pope elementary school purchased $3,837 in war bonds and stamps recently, as their contribution to the campaign to raise money for a new U. S. S. Chicago, it was announced by Miss Blanche Prucha, principal.

Dolores Hayes, 12 year old pupil of the 6th grade, led the student body with two $500 war bonds. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Max Hayes, 3121 West 15th street. Raymond Barth, 9 year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Barth, 3021 West 19th street, used 9,700 Indian head pennies, saved over a period of years, to pay for three bonds.

Three hundred of the Pope school's 780 pupils live in the Marks Nathan hall, Jewish orphanage nearby. Corp. Barney Ross and his two brothers attended the school.

Of the 150 graduating seniors, 25 are in the navy medical reserve and 103 in the army medical reserve.

WILSON JUNIOR COLLEGE HONORS 400 NOW AT WAR

Four hundred [illegible] Wilson Junior college students, now on military duty, have their names inscribed on a school honor plaque, dedicated last week in a public ceremony. Miss Beulah Berolzheimer, special assistant to the dean, gave the dedicatory address. The program was planned by the Wilson City College service bureau, an organization of 50 girl students, who promote patriotic activity, such as letters to service men, military gifts, mailing of the college publication to soldiers, and U. S. O. work.

Urban G. Willis, principal of Pullman Tech since 1919, will speak on the part graduates are playing as fighters on the war fronts, as well as the importance of the school's courses in war time technical training.

Mr. Willis was dean of Pullman Tech from its inception in 1915 to 1917, when he was granted leave of absence to serve as a captain in the army. He is treasurer of the Illinois Vocational association, and a past president of the organization. HARPER SCHOOL WINS IN COPPER, BRASS CAMPAIGN

Average Best Girl Brings in Greatest Amount.

Harper High school's 1,886 students have collected more copper, brass, and bronze than any other Chicago school, on a per pupil basis, it is announced by John Howatt, chief engineer of the board of education, who received reports from the 41 city high schools and 337 elementary schools.

An average of 3.4 pounds of the nonferrous metals were collected for the school by its students during the 12 day test campaign made last month for the war production board. A total of 6,520 pounds were brought to the schoolyard.

Girl Is Champion.

Joyce Maki, 15 years old, a sophomore at Harper, collected 2,520 of the 6,520 pounds, Butler Laughlin, school principal, revealed. She will be awarded a certificate of merit by William L. McFetridge, director of salvage for the Chicago Metropolitan office of civilian defense. Miss Maki is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Maki, 6553 Wood street, across the street from the school. She is a member of the Harper Legion of Honor, having two E's and two S's in her studies. Algebra is her favorite subject, and she hopes to become a school teacher or mathematician. She has been a drama student four years.

Miss Maki was aided by five other students in bringing her scrap metal to the school. They are Evelyn Bader, Louis Drazin, Salvador De Rosa, Robert Kennedy, and Harry Tannahill, all juniors or sophomores.

Robert Browning Second.

Robert Browning, 1654 West 63d street, a sergeant in Harper's R. O. T. C. corps, and James Schneider, 1257 West 77th place, placed second and third respectively in the student scrap drive.

Browning, a sophomore, who claims no relationship with the late English poet of the same name, composed some lines which were posted on the school bulletin board at the height of the campaign. Following are excerpts:

. . . bring to school what scrap you can
Bring all those pots and that old pan.
Search your home; look all around
For thru such searches things are found
Which prove to be a grateful aid. . .
The money received from collected scrap
Will buy some bonds to slap a Jap. . . .
And keep in mind that all your scrap
May kick the axis off the map.

Buy $2,200 in Stamps.

Since the first of January, Harper students have purchased approximately $2,200 in war stamps, and half that sum in war bonds, Miss Berenice McDermott, school war activities coördinator, reported last week. Miss McDermott, an English teacher, was also in charge of the school's metal scrap drive.

Lindblom High school students collected the largest aggregate weight of copper, brass, and bronze—7,334 pounds. On a per student average of 1.9 pounds, this put Lindblom in second place. The eight other high schools with the next highest per pupil averages are as follows:

Fenger	2,222	.60
Tilden	810	.20
Hirsch	392	.20
Harrison	546	.15
Roosevelt	382	.14
South Shore	275	.14
Tuley	283	.098
Amundsen	190	.008

Mount Greenwood elementary school accounted for 815 pounds of copper, brass, and bronze, the largest amount reported for any of the city's public grammar schools. The school was also highest on a per pupil basis, with nearly a one pound average.

The top 10 elementary schools follow:

Mount Greenwood	815	.954
Fulton	500	.761
Park Manor	704	.709
Eberhart	418	.598
Whitney	305	.488
Barton	275	.439
Sullivan	286	.410
Trumbull	440	.399
Lloyd	280	.360
Nobel	322	.337

It was estimated at the office of Salvage Director McFetridge that the city's 250 parochial schools collected approximately 175,000 pounds of scrap copper, brass, and bronze. The public schools, both elementary and high schools, were estimated to have accounted for a total of more than 400,000 pounds.

LEMONT VILLAGE GRADUATES 300 IN OCD COURSES

Climaxing several months of instruction, 300 Lemont residents recently have been certified as graduates of a course in civilian defense in a ceremony held at the Lemont village hall. Another 55 citizens shortly will complete courses of instruction, and it is expected that within the near future more than 700 men and women will be active in community endeavor.

Thor R. Tessem Jr., coördinator of the Lemont civilian defense council, is responsible for an organization which finds one out of every seven persons in Lemont actively engaged in civilian defense work. Deputy Coördinators Joseph Driscoll and Joseph Kaufman, training officers, are assistants.

The cadets were chosen for top honors from among more than 1,000 cadet officers. At the right is Smith A. Funk, Tilden Technical High school, colonel and brigade commander. In line, left to right, are Capt. David Sternfield, Marshall High school; Lt. Col. Edward D. Bowman, Senn; Maj. Walter D. Linzing, Lane; Capt. Luke T. Townsend, Du Sable; Maj. Joseph M. De Frier, Crane; Maj. Robert G. Lieb, Harrison; Capt. George G. Cvejanovich, Bowen; Maj. Robert Piotrowski, Carl Schurz; Capt. Louis A. Whitney, Steinmetz; Lt. Col. Robert E. Bailey, Harper High school.

The War as Fighters See It

turns into a nice gooey mud. The climate isn't too bad in many respects, however, and it certainly beats that of Ireland or England.

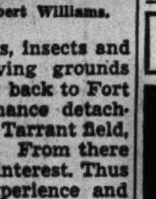
"These folks are a strange lot. Some of the homes are modern and nice, and some of the people are well educated and clean. Others are a strange mixture of races. Some of them look as if they never had a bath and I am firmly convinced that this is true in most cases. They are in rags mostly. They wear their clothes until they rot and then they patch them and wear them until the patches rot.

"Some live with their chickens, goats, and sheep, all in the same room. They beat their animals and their wives. They steal anything, and I guess some would probably slit your throat for a dime or less.

"The animals look like they are almost starved to death. The dogs used to dig up our garbage as fast as we would bury it and then some of the native kids would chase the dogs so they could get at the garbage. I guess much of this was due to the fact that the Germans took every bit of available food but I don't doubt that much of this went on before. Needless to say the situation is improving considerably since we took over.

From Aviation Cadet Robert F. Williams to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Williams, 3432 North Albany avenue. Williams, a graduate of Roosevelt High school, studied electrical communications at the University of Colorado. He is stationed now at Enid, Okla.

"Just another day and I'll be going into my third year in the army. That's a long time for a guy like me to be hanging around with but one employer. Now I look back to the dreadful days of Camp Wallace and its mud, the Fort Bliss auxiliary camp and its sand and wind, Fort Bliss proper in brick barracks, then the Louisiana maneuvers, insects and vermin; Aberdeen proving grounds and the intensive study; back to Fort Bliss and the 8th ordnance detachment; to Ellington field, Tarrant field, and finally San Antonio. From there on the air has held my interest. Thus two years of travel experience and education, in a form.



Robert Williams.

"Life as a whole has been a fast moving thing to those of my generation. Two world wars, a depression unequaled in history, a three-term President, men flying in large numbers, the political issues, education. Really a breath taking pace.

"I don't regret the last two years devoted to the service. It is little enough to pay for having enjoyed the 24 years before in a free country."

Graduates from Tech's Second War Work Course

Mrs. Margaret Delles, 6937 Laflin street, recently completed the Illinois Institute of Technology's second free class for metallurgical technique. The course is open to women with high school diplomas and chemistry training. Women graduated from the first class are now at work in war industries at average salaries of $1,920.

PAVING PROJECTS SCHEDULED ON SOUTHWEST SIDE

Funds to Come from State Gas Tax.

Three new pavements for the southwest side are included in the city's plans for the year, according to William R. Matthews, assistant engineer in charge in the city department of streets and electricity, under Commissioner L. M. Johnson. They are to be paid for from the city's share of Illinois motor fuel tax.

Projects Cost Half Million.

The projects, to cost nearly half a million dollars, include Pershing road from Ashland avenue to Western avenue, one mile, to be widened from 48 to 62 feet; 103d street from Michigan avenue to Vincennes avenue, 1.87 miles, to remain at widths of 42 and 48 feet, and Kedzie avenue, from 31st street to Archer avenue, to be widened from 42 to 56 feet.

The citywide paving program for the year will cost an estimated $3,000,000 from motor fuel taxes, compared with an annual average of $1,750,000 over the last three years, Matthews said. Most of the pavements will be of concrete, some of asphalt.

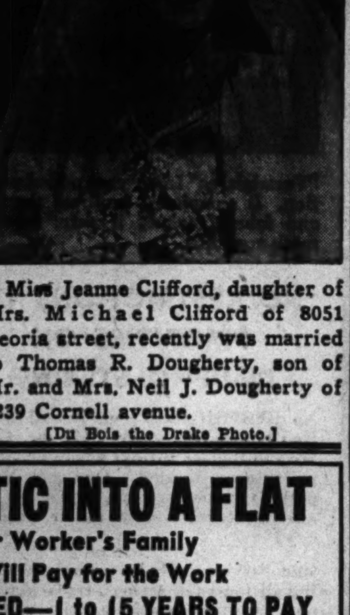
Need Steel Pins.

Steel pins for bolstering joints are the only critical materials needed, Matthews said. Priority ratings will be asked for these, but if they are not granted, the streets will be paved without them. Priorities were granted for about 70 per cent of the city paving jobs last year, the engineer said.

MUSIC SCHOOLS PLAN CONCERT IN WEST PULLMAN

Associates of two music schools will perform at 8 o'clock April 2 in the third annual concert at West Pullman Methodist church, 120th street and Normal avenue. The artists will include Mrs. Christine Elders, Miss Florence Van Rosendale, Miss Dorothy Hoogenboom, Miss Grace Brink, and Lawrence Garetto. Mrs. Vaughn Avakian, 11719 Lowe avenue, will be master of ceremonies. Her husband, Dr. Vaughn Avakian, who originated the concerts, is now in the army air corps.

Wed Recently



Miss Jeanne Clifford, daughter of Mrs. Michael Clifford of 8051 Peoria street, recently was married to Thomas R. Dougherty, son of Mr. and Mrs. Neil J. Dougherty of 7239 Cornell avenue.

CHECK UP HOME NOW FOR NEEDED SPRING REPAIRS

Minor Weak Spots May Grow Like Weeds.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

In any pre-spring checkup of the interior of your house, most homes will reveal certain small weak spots that are minor enough in themselves, but which can grow like weeds and even drive the most poised of hostesses into apology complexes.

By this time the entrance hall may be showing signs of winter's wear and ravages, and if there are scuffed places on the floor around the threshhold it may not be necessary to revarnish the entire floor.

Clean, Sand and Varnish.

One can try a varnish patchup job first—that is if the varnish is not worn thru, but only scuffed and soiled. First, all surface soil should be removed with a damp cloth wrung out from mild soap suds and dried immediately. After this one can use a fine sandpaper and then apply a fresh coat of varnish. To prevent a "patched" look the varnish should be well brushed out at the edges.

If there are scratches in the varnish they can be removed by running turpentine into them and then rubbing them lightly. In case the wear has gone thru to the bare wood the same process can be followed, except that two or more coats of varnish probably will be needed for the refinishing work. If the varnish is in a definitely bad tate all over, it is best to remove what is left of the old finish and refinish from the bare wood floor.

By spring many a house is crying out for more storage space, closets, and shelves.

Enlarge Shallow Closets.

It may be that with a comparatively small investment in materials you can have all the closet space you need. Partitions can be removed from shallow closets, and double doors set a foot farther in the room. Then a full length mirror inside one door and plenty of rods and racks, and you have increased the general utility and size of the original closet.

Shelves are another clever space saver. In the living room there may be space between a fireplace and a jog in the wall where some extra small shelves can be tucked. Or the window sills may be very narrow and you can widen them with less effort than you think, so you've room for more potted greenery and blooming plants, or more space for books and magazines.

It may be possible to install a built-in window seat in the dining room or bedroom, a seat that won't take up much more room than the window sill and yet will be a haven for hard-to-place belongings. And in bedrooms there can hardly be too many shelves if space must be garnered for children's toys, for books, and flowers, for toilet accessories over a chest of drawers, or for pads and ink over a too crowded little work table, or desk.

Shelves for Bedrooms.

If a bedroom or a sleeping porch is very small a shelf can run parallel to the bed for a magazine rack and a lamp, and eliminate the need for a table, for which there just isn't the space.

There will be more and more staying home in spare time for most home owners and detailed inspection by the owners will reveal needed repairs and small improvements, by way of stopping threatened deterioration, and adding extra spaces in the rooms we already have.

SOUTHWEST HIGH R. O. T. C. CADETS WIN PROMOTION

Advancements for eight cadets in the Morgan Park High school R. O. T. C. recently brought the unit's organization to full complement of 23 officers. Promotions were made also at Harper and Calumet High schools, but some places still remained to be filled.

Morgan Park advancements were: Captain, Angus Cotton; first lieutenants, Robert Scheidt, Richard Allen, William Rose, and Warren Ramshaw; second lieutenants, Robert King, William Vogele, and Robert Pilkington.

At Harper High school, Howard Baum was made captain; Robert Rebeck became a major; Edward Aberholden was named first lieutenant, and Thomas Rolando, George Rennwanz, and Roy Brandel were made second lieutenants.

Calumet advancements were: Lieutenant colonel and commanding officer, Edward Alfred Jacobsen; major, John Daniel Franek; captain, Roger Alfred Nelson, and second lieutenant, Norton Charles Seeber.

Singer 50 Years in Male Chorus

Henry Detmer, 7751 Emerald avenue, has been singing with the Catholic Casino male chorus for more than 50 years. The chorus was organized in 1872 and Detmer was the second director. Long since retired from that active role, Detmer continues to attend the Tuesday night rehearsals at Kolping house, 811 Oakdale avenue. "I have found some of the very best friends in the world in the chorus," he says.

Many kinds of annuals and vegetables can be sown directly in a cold frame, but to be successful the requirements are [1] fine, moist soil; [2] thin sowing; [3] light covering; [4] careful watering; [5] abundant ventilation as soon as the plants appear above ground, and [6] early picking off to prevent overcrowding and the likelihood of damping off.

Seedlings are delicate to handle, but they quickly respond to good treatment. Do not allow them to stand after germination for any length of time, for they must have sufficient room to develop.

Sow carefully and thinly and much of the difficulty is avoided. It is a waste to sow seed too thickly when all that is necessary is to sow carefully.

A fine seedbed is essential for the soil. Sowing fine seed too deep is often the cause of uneven germination. Heavy seed should be sown deeper than fine seed.

Tuesday, March 23

Seed will not germinate well in dry soil. Water the seedbed with a fine spray. Transplanted plants are more husky and have a much better root system than those taken directly from the seedbed.

Seedlings may be transplanted at least once into flats prior to setting in the field or garden. If it is necessary to buy a few started plants be sure to select the green, sturdy, vigorous stock.

Do the transplanting to the garden at night or during cloudy weather. Water immediately after planting and shade for a day or two. Remove the shade at night.

Wednesday, March 24

Cuttings from plants grown indoors as house plants should continue if more stock for outdoor planting is wanted. Among these are the coleus, one of the most colorful and useful decorative foliage plants among those most usually grown.

Small 2½ inch plants can be purchased and grown until about May 20 when they can be planted out of doors. One of the most desirable golden leaved varieties is golden bedder, and the red leaved sort, verschaffeltii, also is excellent. They also may be grown from seed.

Other kinds include begonia semperflorens, ageratum, verbena beauty of Oxford, and geraniums. Cannas that were placed in sand some time ago should be potted as soon as the divisions have started into growth and they will be in fine condition by planting out time.

The large tubers of the elephant ear may be started indoors. They are tropical in effect and easy to grow. Large tubers may be cut into divisions, but an eye must be left on each piece.

Thursday, March 25

Sweet peas should be sown as soon as the ground can be worked, for they like cool conditions. To sow, make a wide drill about three inches deep and sow at the rate of one pint of seed to 60 feet of drill.

Scatter the seed over the drill to avoid overcrowding; if they are crowded thin them out to give space for each plant. If more than one row is wanted, make the rows four feet apart.

Support with chicken wire or brush. This plant is well adapted to suburban sections because of the better atmospheric conditions and abundant sun. The soil should be well enriched. Mulch during hot weather to conserve the moisture.

Friday, March 26

Do not abandon the perennial borders, but continue to develop the plants to obtain maximum bloom. As soon as the plants show growth divide and replant the fast growing, spreading kinds, such as hardy asters, Oswego tea, Shasta daisies, false dragonhead, sweet William, phlox, and goldenglow.

If the plants have formed dense masses lift them, remove the soil, and replace them with fresh soil or give a good application of decayed manure.

Saturday, March 27

Practically all house plants may be shifted now. Use a soil consisting of one-half garden loam, one-quarter peat or leafmold, and one-quarter sand. Mix well together.

A four inch potful of commercial plant food may be incorporated in the mixture. Screen to remove large lumps. Use small pots or of a size that will be careful not to overpot. If old pots are used, clean them by soaking for 24 hours, then scrub clean.

See that the soil is moistened before using; place plenty of drainage in the bottom of the pots to avoid possible clogging, with subsequent saturated soil.

Prepared in coöperation with Garfield park conservatory.

Miss Helen Langowski, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Borsick, 5526 South Oak Park avenue, was married recently to Edward Bucina, son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Bucina, 5524 South Nagle avenue, in a ceremony at St. Joseph's church, Summit. Mr. Bucina is a student in the evening classes of the Illinois Institute of Technology.

Heald Holds Six National Operational Posts.

Title of the south side's busiest war worker probably goes to Henry T. Heald, president of the Illinois Institute of Technology. In addition to serving nation's largest technical school, President Heald hold six posts actively affiliated with the conduct of the war.

Fulfilling these duties keeps the tall, dynamic college president in Washington much of the time. He attributes the smooth operation of the institute in his absence to the skill of members of his staff.

Naval Personnel Adviser.

One of the most important posts he holds is special adviser on training to the bureau of naval personnel, which has charge of the various navy "V" programs.

President Heald is a member of the American Council on Education's committee on the relationship of higher education to the federal government in the war effort. This group helped draft the army-navy education plan, and President Heald served on a subcommittee which worked out details of the plan.

He also is president of the Society for the Promotion of Engineering Education, which directs the activities of engineering schools. It is the responsibility of this body to meet the shortage of engineers. A compact curriculum and plan of uniform action has been worked out which has proved satisfactory to the army and navy.

On Tribune Honor Committee.

President Heald was selected as chairman of THE TRIBUNE's war workers award committee, which each month honors a worker who has made a notable contribution to war industry. He is a consultant to the war man power commission.

The sixth post he holds is that of regional adviser to the United States office of education's engineering, science, and management war training program. He is adviser for region 14, which includes Illinois and southern Wisconsin.

Only 38 years old, Heald was named president of the institute in 1940 when it was formed by the consolidation of Armour institute and Lewis institute. He began his work at the school in 1927 as assistant professor of engineering at Armour institute.

Selected as Outstanding.

8th District Legion.

The regular meeting of the 8th district of the American Legion will be held Thursday in the city hall, Hazelcrest. Walter G. Stansel, 15740 Marshfield avenue, is district commander.

FOUR PUPILS WIN WAR STAMPS IN CONTEST OF ART

Four southwest side elementary school pupils recently won war stamp prizes in a drawing contest based on the "Art Goes to War" series of Chicago public schools radio broadcasts. The pictures have been on display at the Morrison hotel. The southwest winners are Evelyn Rysewski, 12, of 5033 South Marshfield avenue, grade 7B, Fulton school; Evelyn Mack, 15, of 5234 South Honore street, grade 8A, Fulton school; Evelyn Jacob, 14, of 5731 South Talman avenue, grade 8A, Gage Park school, and Ernest Gerules, 13, of 3505 South Halsted street, grade 8A, McClellan school.

Capt. John Wietrzykowski.

A graduate of Loyola university in the class of 1927, he served his internship at Mercy hospital and later was on the staffs of the Contagious Disease hospital, Misericordia hospital and St. Mary of Nazareth hospital. He was an instructor in contagious diseases at St. Mary of Nazareth until his recent enlistment.

He was also associated with St. Hedwig's Industrial school of Niles.

Born in Lemont, where his mother still resides, Capt. Wietrzykowski was educated in Chicago. He married Othelia Weyna of Chicago in 1930. They have four children: John Jr., 11; Conrad, 9; Mitchell, 5, and Marcia, 1. All reside at the home at 4968 Milwaukee avenue.

The captain has two sisters in the Felician convent, Sister Mary Bernadette and Sister Mary Edith.

Park Orchids Now Get Care of a Woman

Many garden club women have raised prize winning blooms in years gone by, but it took the war to promote the ladies to the status of professional horticulturists with the park district. The park district greenhouses have in part solved their problem of shortage of man power by employing 12 women as members of their florist staff.

Of that dozen women with the "green thumb," the one who has what may be the most interesting job is Mrs. Mary Ascuito, member of the orchid section at Kilbourn park greenhouse, 3501 North Kilbourn avenue. Born in a small Louisiana town near New Orleans, she moved to St. Louis, Mo., with her family when she was a child, and received her education there. She studied apparel design at St. Ambrose college, and taught WPA sewing classes after moving to Chicago in 1928.

In Charge of Orchids.

Mrs. Ascuito had always been interested in raising flowers, vegetables, and fruit trees. But the orchid culture is to her more fascinating than any of the other jobs she has ever handled. She takes care of 40 varieties of blooms, many of which originate in tropical Mexico, Brazil, and French Guiana. During the current azalea and rhododendron show at Garfield park conservatory, Mrs. Ascuito is in charge of the orchid display just inside the main entrance, where there are displayed more than a dozen varieties of rare orchids.

Newest addition to the florist staff of the Chicago park district is Mrs. Jean Gallagher, 802 North Bishop street. She is one of five women now employed at the Lincoln park conservatory. Born in Grand Rapids, Mich., she and her family moved to northern Idaho when she was 14 years old. In 1919 she entered Cook county hospital as a trained nurse, but she gave up her nursing career a few years later to become a housewife. She has always had an interest in raising her own plants, and has a special hobby of growing cacti. Mrs. Gallagher is the mother of four sons and a daughter, from 4 to 18 years old.

"More Than Satisfactory."

Both William C. Blaesing, acting chief horticulturist of the Chicago park district, and C. Edwin Hewitt, horticulturist at Lincoln park conservatory, have indicated that they are more than satisfied with the way in which the women members of the florist staff at the park conservatories have learned their exacting tasks.

Duties of women members of the florist staff include the staking and tying of plants, transplanting from seed flats into flower pots, moving plants so they receive neither too much nor too little sunlight, trimming and cleaning plant foliage, and shaping plants so that they branch out properly, a process known to horticulturists as "topping" or "pinching."

Not the only new jobs for women with the park district are those in greenhouses. The service guards are posted at important crossings on park district boulevards to aid children in crossing the streets to and from school. This, too, is a field in which no women were employed until last May.

Work as Service Guards.

GARFIELD PARK SHOWING A HUGE FLOWER DISPLAY

One of the largest exhibitions of azaleas and rhododendrons ever seen in Chicago is being shown at the Garfield park conservatory. The display will continue thru March 31. More than 650 of the waxy multicolored floral plants are housed in the conservatory's Horticultural hall. Some of the azalea bushes are seven feet in diameter, and contain 1,000 blossoms.

William C. Blaesing, acting chief horticulturist of the park district, said the current azalea show has been three years in the making. Chief problem, he pointed out, in planning such an exhibition was to schedule the nurturing of the show's more than 30 varieties of azaleas, each with its own rate of bloom, so they all would blossom simultaneously for the exhibition.

More than 30 rhododendron plants, first cousins of the azalea, are added features of the show. Largest of these possess 75 blossoms each. Panel beds in the exhibit are chiefly of lavender primroses and white cyclamen. The show is open daily from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and on Sundays until 10 o'clock at night.

Women Take Over Men's Jobs for Park District

Only since the war began have women been added to the florist staffs of the park district conservatories. Mrs. Jean Gallagher, 802 North Bishop street, a recent addition to the personnel at Lincoln park conservatory, inspects a bush of white azaleas set in a bed of lavender primroses. The park district has been adding women to its florist staffs at both Garfield and Lincoln park conservatories to compensate for increasing losses in man power.

Service Guard Mary Cunningham, 2844 North Richmond street, halts traffic at her post at Logan boulevard and Fairfield avenue, so that Robert Weyrauch, 11, 2806 Altgeld street, and Rita Piesciuk, 5, 2613 Fairfield avenue, may cross the boulevard safely on their way home from Brentano school. New feminine additions to the service guards are being drilled daily by the park district police.

Mrs. Mary Ascuito works with the orchids at the Kilbourn park greenhouse and is responsible for the culture of more than 40 varieties of those tropical blooms.

NAME 5 PUPILS TO PLAN YOUTH WEEK IN APRIL

Five high school students have been named to represent five high school districts in the city in making plans for the second annual Chicago students' vocational convention to be held in the Morrison hotel April 21 as a part of Youth Week observance. Later 10 representatives will be named from each of the city's 40 high schools.

The convention was originated last year by the Union League club and Altrusa, with the coöperation of other women's civic groups. "Youth in the Service of America" is the theme for this year's session.

CITY SCHEDULES 6 PAVING JOBS ON NORTHWEST SIDE

$738,000 Cost to Be Paid from Gas Tax.

Six pavement improvement and widening jobs are scheduled on the northwest side this year, according to William R. Matthews, assistant engineer in charge in the department of streets and electricity. The work is estimated to cost $738,000 to be paid by motor fuel taxes.

Austin avenue will be widened from 40 and 24 foot sections to a uniform 42 feet for 1.15 miles from Higgins avenue to Elston avenue. Damen avenue will be widened from 38 to 51 feet for one mile between Fullerton and North avenues.

Widen Division Street.

Division street will be widened from 50 to 56 feet between Milwaukee and Elston avenues; Grand avenue will be widened from 42 to 51 feet from Sacramento avenue to Division street; Kedzie avenue will be made 51 instead of 42 feet from Logan Square to Elston avenue, and Milwaukee avenue, between Fullerton and Belmont avenues, will be widened from 38 to 51 feet.

The city-wide fuel tax paving program estimated to cost $3,000,000 this year is more than one-third greater than the annual average of $1,750,000 over the last three years.

Ask for Steel Pins.

Most of the surfaces will be of concrete, some of asphalt, with steel pins to bolster joints, the only critical materials needed, according to Matthews. Priority ratings will be asked for these, but if they are not available pavements wil lbe laid without them, the engineer said. Last year steel was allowed for 70 per cent of the city's paving jobs.

Gradually, Matthews said, the city is adapting old horse and buggy streets to modern requirements, with four traffic lanes and two parking lanes to be provided wherever possible. The pavement width is limited by the width of the right of way, which varies.

TRIBUNE WILL PRINT 3 DETAILED LETTERS FROM YANKS WEEKLY

The War As Fighters See It department provides a medium wherein letters from service men and service women received by relatives and friends may have a wider circle of appreciative readers.

That more space may be given to letters which, because of their interest, merit more than excerpts, but three letters will be selected for publication each week. The briefest of letters, however, will be given equal consideration. Even the postal card message may contain a nugget of originality. For each letter printed in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, $5 will be paid the sender.

Senders of letters are asked to comply with the following suggestions:

Send COPIES of the treasured letters, do NOT send the originals. Do not send framed photographs or scrapbooks. THE TRIBUNE cannot be responsible for letters lost in transmission, nor return the letters.

Photographs of the letter writer and a brief biography of the writer are desired. Those requesting return of the pictures should write the request and address on the back of the pictures, but THE TRIBUNE regrets that it cannot accept responsibility for such return.

Conley Legion Auxiliary Plans Social Gathering

A social meeting will be held Wednesday evening by the John F. Conley American Legion auxiliary at 3868 Grand avenue. Mrs. Bertha Borelli, chairman, will present a community service program, with Mrs. Clara Engler, ninth district community service chairman, as speaker. Hostesses for the evening will be Mrs. Rose Burdahl, Mrs. Florence Cowles, Mrs. Lillian Kelly, and Mrs. Marie Shaw. The auxiliary will also sponsor a dance Saturday evening at the post clubrooms, 3868 Grand avenue.

The War as Fighters See It

From Walter L. DeVinck, electrician's mate, 2d class, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. August DeVinck, 2212 Sherman avenue, Evanston. DeVinck, in the navy since December, 1938, was at Pearl Harbor, participated in four naval battles in one of which his ship was sunk. After being on a small island for a week the survivors were picked up and taken to Australia. DeVinck made the trip to America on an oil tanker.

Everything here [America] is like an unbelievable dream, for I've spent so much time convincing myself that I'd never reach the United States again until after the war.

Walter L. DeVinck.

"The food is like —— well my first meal was so good for a change from those I'd eaten over there that tears of appreciation and thanksgiving were really hard to hold back. I can safely say that you can smell the difference in the air alone, taste America in everything you eat.

"It's absolutely incredible to notice such tremendous differences between the quality of things you hear, see, smell, feel, etc., here and in other lands. Mother, I sincerely believe that there was a garden of forbidden fruit—a God's special creation of the best which we now call America. I'm still so nervous and jumpy about being here that I just can't settle down to a normal state of mind just yet.

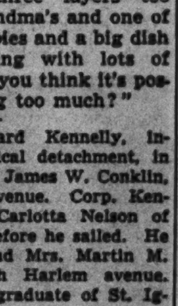
"Words, written or spoken, will never reveal to the people of this country just what a paradise they live in. The only ones who will realize are those now fighting on the war fronts—the sons and daughters who are now in no position to relay the facts that all American people should know. The man behind the man behind the gun is the one on whom we depend to win this war.

"Man, what a treat; desks to write on, soft lounge chairs, good radio programs, soda fountains, canteens, cokes, clean shower rooms, plenty of liberty, and time off and beautiful women are all over the place. The first pretty girl I saw on the train going across the bridge to the city looked so welcome to my eyes that I wanted to stare at her.

"I feel like some one who is getting a new start in life—a new chance to survive. I'm happy again."

From Corp Robert E. Witt to his "Dear Mom"—Mrs. Edna Witt, 3735 Bosworth avenue. Corp. Witt, member of a coast artillery unit, was reported missing in action after the fall of Corregidor in May, 1942. His mother believes Corp. Witt to be a prisoner of the Japs.

"I may be a little early for this but you can keep this part of the letter on file for when I get home. Here 'tis, the first dinner I would like to have you cook for me after I get off the train. Of course I'll want . . . over to eat with me and you can invite any one you wish to but—ah, yes—the menu.

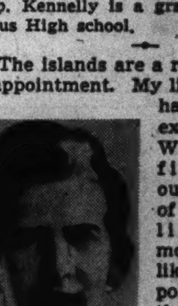


Robert E. Witt.

"Let's see now, nice pork roast, mashed potatoes and gravy, pickles and olives, waldorf salad, creamed wax beans, applesauce, sweet potatoes and a pineapple juice drink. For dessert, coffee, one of your chocolate layer cakes [is three layers too much?], one of grandma's and one of Aunt Anna's apple pies and a big dish of chocolate pudding with lots of whipped cream. Do you think it's possible or am I asking too much?"

From Corp. Edward Kennelly, infantry regiment medical detachment, in Hawaii, to his friend, James W. Conklin, 5967 North Oconto avenue. Corp. Kennelly married Miss Carlotta Nelson of Park Ridge shortly before he sailed. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin M. Kennelly, 5647 North Harlem avenue. Corp. Kennelly is a graduate of St. Ignatius High school.

"The islands are a revelation and a disappointment. My literary perusals had led me to expect too much. When the island first appeared out of the mists of the sea, a brilliant emerald mound rising like a green felt poker table from the very lap of Neptune, it was the picture that I had always held in my mind of what Ireland would be like, lush, abundant, fertile greenness, moist and always the softly rolling sea.



Edward Kennelly.

"I had expected hot sands, bamboo trees, and towering coconuts. Of course they are all growing here but not in the amount that you would expect. And I can assure you no Hedy Tondelayo in brilliant sarong offered to make 'tiffin' for me. As a matter of fact what most of the kids wear here might be called a modified zoot suit, sans shoes, of course.

"When we disembarked we were loaded into trucks and sent to our destination. If you can imagine a tour thru the Lincoln park conservatory on a tricycle you have a faint idea of the beauty of the glorious flowers along the roadside.

TOWN OF 3,800 BUILDS A THORO ORGANIZATION

War Fund Campaign Beats Quota.

Crystal Lake—a village of 3,800 persons, who feel the responsibility of their Red Cross organization—has set a stiff pace in the Chicago area with active surgical dressing groups, canteen and production corps, nurses' aides and home nursing units, and first aid graduates, all operating under the aegis of the parent organization. Latest achievement is their Red Cross war fund drive in which, according to Harry C. Shales, chairman of the village branch, they have passed $4,500—more than 50 per cent above the town's quota of $2,900.

The quota seemed a great deal for a town of 3,800 persons—more than 300 of whom work in Chicago's loop. Last war fund quota was $1,325, and Crystal Lake raised $2,000 in about a week. But that was immediately following Pearl Harbor, and the psychological value of the attack had to be discounted. Too, there was the matter of income taxes to be reckoned against.

Call Meeting of 100.

Mrs. Jerome Bond and her co-chairmen, Mrs. Ralph Boyle and Mrs. A. H. Henderson Jr., called a meeting of 100 workers at the city hall. It was decided that if the money could be raised at all, it could be raised in a week as easily as in a month.

The response to the current drive is not traceable solely to the organization for the drive itself, or even to the work done by the volunteers, the committee in charge declares. The village of Crystal Lake has a Red Cross setup as efficient as any large city, and its citizens, made aware of the work of the Red Cross, answer quickly any plea for help.

The village has a motor corps, a group of nurses' aids who work in the Woodstock hospital, a canteen corps, production corps, and surgical dressing unit. It has had home nursing courses, and about 500 of its citizens have taken first aid training. It is a part of the McHenry county chapter, of which Mrs. W. Earle Phinney of Woodstock is volunteer special services chairman. The 13 branches in the county, under her leadership, have almost all reached the same state of organization for Red Cross work.

Production Rate High.

Mrs. F. E. Edwards is in charge of the production room in Crystal Lake, at the Community High school. Her corps has manufactured 3,025 garments in the last year, cutting up 1,915 yards of material. Mrs. Gordon Lowell, in charge of knitting, has supervised the making of 812 knitted garments. McHenry county as a whole in one year made 4,978 articles for refugees, and 4,250 for the services and military hospitals.

Mrs. D. R. Ganey has charge of the making of surgical dressings, two days each week in St. Thomas school. This project has been under way only since last September, but the 90 workers have made 60,000 surgical dressings to date.

Crystal Lake Canteen corps is headed by Mrs. Hal Totten, and organized on the ward basis. Mrs. Eugene Ryan is ward one chairman, with Mrs. Fred Rose. Mrs. H. A. Lippold, Mrs. J. H. Cupps, and Mrs. H. C. Fulde as aids. In ward two, Mrs. Henry Cowlin is chairman, assisted by Mrs. E. H. Cowan, Mrs. J. A. Sandstrom, Mrs. R. S. Robinson, and Mrs. William Birk. Ward three is headed by Mrs. Helen Haas aided by Mrs. Erich Utech, Mrs. Villa Millar, Rose Kellogg, Mrs. W. D. Kelly, and Mrs. Gertrude Geer. Chairman of ward four is Mrs. Ashbrook, with a committee which includes Mrs. Claude Jacobs, Mrs. Joseph A. Conerty, Mrs. J. M. Haydn, and Mrs. George Wyman.

Serve Departing Selectees.

The different wards in the canteen corps take turns serving early morning coffee and doughnuts to selectees as they leave the induction center at Woodstock. They also serve refreshments twice a week to the surgical dressing workers. Just now five members are taking a 20-hour canteen course at the county headquarters in Woodstock.

Interest has been widespread in the home nursing classes, which have been under the direction of Mrs. Jean Gilbert.

Mrs. Austin Selz heads the Crystal Lake staff assistance corps, which keeps track of hours and records of all kinds for the production room and the surgical dressing room, and for all the other corps. They also have been selling war savings stamps and bonds on Saturdays for the last four weeks, and during that short time have chalked up $4,185.20 in sales. According to Mrs. Selz's records during the last six months, the number of workers each month averages about 200, and during that six month period they have put in 19,111 hours.

Six Nurses' Aids.

The nurses' aid corps includes Mrs. Burton L. Snow, chairman, and Mrs. P. K. Becker, Mrs. Jan Grimm, Mrs. Larry Nystrom, Miss Leona Wurtzinger, Mrs. William R. Tencate. Since Crystal Lake has no hospital, these six work in Woodstock. They have put in 375 hours since Jan. 13. Their enthusiasm has been so contagious that there is a waiting list in Crystal Lake for the next nurses' aid course.

CHANUTE OPENS A NEW DOOR TO SKILLFUL HANDS

BY ROSCOE SIMMONS.

Chanute, Ill., March 20.—Chanute field, one of the most famous of American air training bases, is more campus than camp. It is school and college, a university of specialization. It is heart of the army ain forces technical command, altho headquarters of the command is in Knollwood, N. C.

Situated almost mid-Illinois, the sweep of its acres, the architecture of countless buildings, the earnest demeanor of its student soldiers, all speak the spirit of this laboratory of flight.

Here assemble American youth, without distinction as to race or color, to study side by side how to keep fighting ships in the air. Without Chanute and its dozen sister schools, the epic story of American air fighters could not be told.

Trainees Picked for Aptitude.

Trainees reach Chanute not by their own choice, but because they were picked from their units for aptness; as fit to go on with higher technical knowledge required to "keep 'em flying." Here those who study flying almost never fly.

Chanute is representative of the integration of every creed and color and race into the unanimity of war. It is so with the student body and so with its "faculty."

Glamour of the military camp—drill, marching, music—is missing here. Nor are the skies over Chanute filled with ships. But as a technical command Chanute cannot possibly be second to any similar center in a world of war.

Send Ships Up Right.

The stirring motto of the army air forces training—SUSTINEO ALAS—was repeated to a colored [soldier] student. "I know," he said, "but I was never much on Latin, but I'll do my best to send the ships up right, and if they're downed I'll send 'em right back up all right again."

Subjects taught include parachute rigging, link trainer [where those who teach flying themselves may not know how to fly], teletype machinery, sheet metal, welding, heat treating, electrical devices, instruments of the earth and the heavens, special purpose vehicles, and the weather.

"God's Chilluns Got Wings."

One of the many colored boys, shaping an after-the-war career for machinery, was reminded of the English version of the command's motto—"I Sustain the Wings." "Well," he said, "since all God's chilluns got wings, I ought to be good working with 'em."

Every day is Commencement day at Chanute and the graduates are dispatched to ground centers stretching across the land. Each student studies to become expert on one thing; seeks to master one part of an airship. Marks here are not made on ancestry but on industry, attention, aptitude. When the graduates move out, they may turn up even in places where custom never expected to see them.

Some may be surprised to learn that colored instructors teach at Chanute, instruct some of the most difficult courses. But you see the colored instructors in every shop, surrounded by white and colored students. One colored instructor, Ernest Curtis, native of Springfield, Ill., was himself a student at Chanute. Within a year he was student and teacher.

Other Colored Instructors.

Other colored instructors at Chanute include Earl W. Smith, teletype; Robert Dickson, heat treating; Thomas Hopkins, welding; Wyatt Isabell, electrical division; M. D. Lee, link trainer, and Kenneth Brooks, sheet metal. The army never tells all, but many things one may see for himself.

The 99th Pursuit Squadron, composed of colored flyers, was once stationed at Chanute. Necessity of war sent them to other fields and duties. The squadron no doubt felt regret at leaving the command of Brig. Gen. R. E. O'Neill, commanding officer at Chanute, who had said of all his boys: "I will see you thru in keeping with military necessity, with our war aims, and what is just."

Going and coming is endless here, and tomorrow may bring back the 99th or two or three squadrons. As elsewhere, discipline is doing its work at Chanute. Many of the boys call Chanute an opportunity.

Opens a New Door.

The big name at Chanute, as elsewhere in the technical training command, is that of Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, its commander. He stirs the imagination of youth.

"Yes sir," he said, "I'm reading about Gen. Weaver, my countryman, our high man." He then added: "Gen. Weaver opened a new door to me, he and Uncle Sam, and I'm beating it out for them." That was his story, deeper far in looks than in words.

At Chanute young men with a talent are forgetting little things. "Look," said a colored boy to me, "I'm in the army and college at the same time. This is worth fighting for."

An honor graduate of Schurz High school and treasurer of his class at the Illinois Institute of Technology, Donald Glenn Miller, 18, of 4421 North La Crosse avenue, volunteered for the army air forces last December. TAFT HIGH GIRLS TOSS COMPACTS INTO SCRAP PILE

War Salvage Drive Puts Crimp in Primping.

The girls at Taft High school, 5625 North Natoma avenue, may be doing a little less primping in weeks to come. During last week they contributed compacts to the school-wide salvage drive, in the first of a series of special campaigns designed to bring in vital scrap materials.

A continuous salvage collection drive at Taft was started with a Compact week. Metal compacts, lipstick tubes, and other similar articles were dug out of drawers at home, and brought to the school's collection. Altho there are 225 more girls than boys in the student body, the competition is keen between the two groups, to see which shall turn in the most salvage each week.

See Results Posted.

This week will be Key week, when students will bring in all types of discarded keys, whether of bronze, brass, or iron. A system of posting the results each day in the home rooms has been worked out, and collections and reports have become routine matters.

To furnish publicity, one of the advanced art students, Harry Bieber, has made a poster, mounted as a picture eight feet square. This is placed in one corner of the lunchroom. Various student groups have different responsibilities in connection with the campaign. The public speaking class under Mrs. Vera McConville will visit each home room this week, and speakers will explain uses that can be made of the metal, details of the contest, and reports on collections.

The student council and cleanup committee have representatives in each room of the school to act as cochairmen of the rooms. These representatives handle the collections and records.

Name School Committee.

The school committee, other than individual home room representatives, includes: Malcolm McCuaig, in charge of assembly programs; Mrs. Adelaide Holterhoff, cleanup chairman; Miss Helen Unseth, arts department chairman; Miss Jean Romano, art teacher; Robert Miller, student council sponsor; Mrs. Vera McConville, chairman public speaking department; Claran E. Fullmer, salvage coördinator; Mrs. Ernest Anderson, PTA president; Mrs. R. W. Larson, PTA community service chairman, and Miss Alice Brady, art teacher.

The contest will close May 7, with a Cleanup assembly. There will be presentation of specially made walnut shields to the divisions collecting the greatest poundage of metal.

SEEK GIRL SCOUT LEADERS IN PARK RIDGE CAMPAIGN

Fifteen Volunteer for Training Study.

A campaign to recruit adult leaders for the 14 troops of the Girl Scout council of Park Ridge was reported by Mrs. Kenneth R. Wells, council chairman, well along toward its goal. Council members who had appeared before 22 civic groups of Park Ridge to enlist support for the program had received applications from 15 volunteers.

Plan Training Course.

These volunteers together with others who offer their services before the month's end will be given a four weeks course under the direction of Miss Joan B. Thompson, traveling executive secretary of the national council. The course which will begin April 12 will consist of 16 hours of study. Those selected at the end of the course will serve as observers of scout activities until fall and will then take charge of troops.

The present campaign was made necessary by resignations of leaders and an increase in troop membership. Many leaders had resigned from scout activities to work in war industries. Others left Park Ridge to be with their husbands at training camps. And the council, in order to find a place for new scout members, was forced to allow the troops in Park Ridge to accept more than their normal quota of newcomers.

Troops Over Quotas.

Troops which average 18 members for the Brownie Girl Scouts and 24 for regular Girl Scouts were accommodating as many as 34 and 44 members.

Members of the Girl Scouts council of Park Ridge assisting in the present drive are: Mrs. R. C. Gamble, commissioner; Mrs. D. G. Mueller, Mrs. P. M. Carrick, Mrs. Robert Leslie, Mrs. Charles Passmore, Mrs. A. E. Miller, Mrs. Louis Gill, Mrs. Philip Arnold, Mrs. G. A. Crosby, Mrs. Harry McQueen, Mrs. Raymond Gutz, Mrs. H. M. ARTIST'S NEEDLE BRINGS PRIZES TO MAKER OF QUILTS

Northwest Sider to Show at Art Institute.

Most art students anticipate that their first shows will include oil paintings, a few water colors, and possibly a pastel. But Mrs. Bernard Stenge, 2508 North Bernard street, once a student at the art school of the University of California, will have her first public exhibition early this summer, and it will consist of quilts. No definite date has been set, but Mrs. Stenge's 20 quilts, all but one a prize winner, will hang in the Art institute as one of the summer exhibits.

Mrs. Bernard Stenge. [Allied News Photo.]

Mrs. Stenge's most recent triumph came a few weeks ago, when she won a $1,000 grand prize for a quilt with a patriotic motif, entered in a contest sponsored by a national woman's magazine. Another quilt entered in the same contest won $25 for honorable mention, and the grand prize quilt won the first prize of $100 in its division, making her total winnings $1,125.

Prize Winning Is Habit.

Prize winning isn't a new experience for Mrs. Stenge. Her quilts have won the grand prize at the New York World's fair, first prizes at the Canadian National exposition in 1936, and blue ribbons at the Cook county fairs. In fact, each of the 20 has won one or more prizes—with the exception of one.

That poor unfortunate, a bold original design in bright green and rose, was eclipsed in its first contest. Mrs. Stenge's daughter Ruth wasn't surprised at that, for she declared the quilt looked like a "nightmare." Dubbed "Ruthie's Nightmare," the quilt has appeared in a number of hobby shows.

Designs Original Quilts.

Mrs. Stenge seldom follows any of the old, traditional quilt patterns. Instead, she utilizes her art training to design fresh, original quilts, with special significance to her family. When Ruth became engaged, Mrs. Stenge copied the design from her engagement ring into a lovely quilt in rose and gray. When Mr. and Mrs. Stenge went abroad some years ago, the design on the panels of the dining salon intrigued her, and she copied them into a quilt she has called "Saturnia Souvenir." Another time, a design on a Byzantine plate in a museum inspired still another intricate design, with 7,200 pieces, which she called the "Star of Constantin." Several of these have been put into pattern form by a woman's magazine, so they may be copied.

Many of Mrs. Stenge's masterpieces feature beautiful trapunto quilting. One of the recent ones has a religious motif, with the figure of a woman praying raised in bas-relief by means of the trapunto work.

Artist Schooled Herself.

The fine art of needlework didn't come to Mrs. Stenge naturally. She had never done much sewing until 10 years ago, when an illness made it necessary for her to find a hobby she could pursue indoors. She learned by trial and error. On one of her first pieced quilts, in the traditional "Feathered Star" design, Mrs. Stenge cut the blocks much too large—and the finished quilt is big enough for two beds. The trapunto work she also worked out for herself—and well, for judges in the contests she has entered have all complimented her on her exquisite handiwork.

Mr. Stenge, an attorney with offices on La Salle street, is almost as enthusiastic over his wife's hobby as she is. They have three daughters: Frances, chief dietitian at Oak Forest sanitarium; Mrs. Ruth Wichnick, who lives nearby with her husband and two small children; and Prudence, chief clerk for the draft board at the Seneca hotel.

Chronicle in Cloth.

Possibly Mrs. Stenge's own favorite, because of the sentiment involved, is her original "Scrapbook" quilt. On it, in intricate applique pictures, she has chronicled the major events in her life, as well as painting in colored cloth the portraits of her family. The border is an intricate design, embroidered in outline stitch, involving acrostics of the major places of interest visited by the Stenges in years past.

Since her recent prominence after winning the $1,000 prize, Mrs. Stenge has been besieged by "fan mail." A girl in the Kentucky mountains wrote asking for a towel for her collection, and mothers of sons in the service have written about the patriotic quilt. She has been asked for contributions to everything imaginable—including a leper colony. However, with the exception of the $400 in taxes which went to the government, Mrs. Stenge has put the rest in war bonds. The money doesn't affect her much, one way or the other. What pleases her is to find how many people are interested in quilts.

LAUNCH PLEDGE DRIVE FOR WAR GARDENS APRIL 1

Families in 4,500 Blocks to Be Contacted.

Commanders of the 21 communities in division five of the office of civilian defense will be busy this week preparing for the war garden pledge campaign to begin April 1.

The plan is to secure a pledge from each family in the 4,500 blocks of the division thru coöperation of block garden wardens.

Each family will be asked to support the war garden program by promising:

To grow a war garden in the back yard.

To take part in a community war garden project.

To secure a lot outside if none is available in the community.

To coöperate in a children's war garden project.

Suggest Back Porch Plot.

Or—if time or place is not available—to grow some vegetables on the back porch of the house or place of business.

The pledge forms will be held in the community offices of OCD until midsummer when they will be returned to the war garden wardens. After a survey of their blocks at that time wardens will award OCD war garden window stickers to those who kept their pledges.

List of Chairmen.

War garden chairmen for the 21 communities of division five are: Stephen A. Bubacz, Northwest Town; Z. W. Lepkowski, Humboldt Park; Mrs. Anna Swanson, Milwaukee-Armitage-Western; Robert C. Riley, Wright-Fullerton; Adolph von Eitzen, Belmont-Cragin; C. H. Hildebrandt, Hanson Park; Mrs. Esther Olberg, Mont Clare; Peter Hoffman, Belmont Heights; Maon Jones, Logan Square; Henry Zmich, Avondale; Mrs. F. B. Cheevar, Irving Park.

Other community chairmen are: Harold K. MacShane, Albany Park; Herman Nordlinger, North Park; John P. Kreutzer, Sauganash; M. C. Lichtenwalter, Mayfair; Mrs. Fred Ott, Portage Park; Robert Hughes, Jefferson Park; Ida N. Luedcke, Forest Glen; Earl Weil, Norwood Park; Mrs. M. W. Unsuth, Edison Park, and Mrs. Florence Nystrom, Edgebrook.

Africa, to his wife, Mrs. Louise Meade, 1109 North Long avenue, Oak Park. Meade, a graduate of the University of Illinois in 1938, was employed as a chemist in the Riverdale works of the Acme Steel company, until he entered the army in May, 1941.

The days are hot and the nights are cold. The dust is terrific and when it does rain—which is seldom—it turns into a nice gooey mud. The climate isn't too bad in many respects, however, and it certainly beats that of Ireland or England.

"These folks are a strange lot. Some of the homes are modern and nice, and some of the people are well educated and clean. Others are a strange mixture of races. Some of them look as if they never had a bath and I am firmly convinced that this is true in most cases. They are in rags mostly. They wear their clothes until they rot and then they patch them and wear them until the patches rot.

"Some live with their chickens, goats, and sheep, all in the same room. They beat their animals and their wives. They steal anything, and I guess some would probably slit your throat for a dime or less.

"The animals look like they are almost starved to death. The dogs used to dig up our garbage as fast as we would bury it and then some of the native kids would chase the dogs so they could get at the garbage. I guess much of this was due to the fact that the Germans took every bit of available food but I don't doubt that much of this went on before. Needless to say the situation is improving considerably since we took over.

From Aviation Cadet Robert F. Williams to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Williams, 3432 North Albany avenue. Williams, a graduate of Roosevelt High school, studied electrical communications at the University of Colorado. He is stationed now at Enid, Okla.

"Just another day and I'll be going into my third year in the army. That's a long time for a guy like me to be hanging around with but one employer. Now I look back to the dreadful days of Camp Wallace and its mud, the Fort Bliss auxiliary camp and its sand and wind, Fort Bliss proper in brick barracks, then the Louisiana maneuvers, insects and vermin; Aberdeen proving grounds and the intensive study; back to Fort Bliss and the 8th ordnance detachment; to Ellington field, Tarrant field, and finally San Antonio. From there on the air has held my interest. Thus two years of travel experience and education, in a form.

"Life as a whole has been a fast moving thing to those of my generation. Two world wars, a depression unequaled in history, a three-term President, men flying in large numbers, the political issues, education. Really a breath taking pace.

"I don't regret the last two years devoted to the service. It is little enough to pay for having enjoyed the 24 years before in a free country."

Shares His Pay

Attending mess sergeant's school at fort Warren, Wyoming, 19 year old Pvt. Robert Alexander Hart, 542 North Homan avenue, makes $139 a month. He keeps $32 for himself. The rest goes to his parents, five sisters, and three brothers—all wholly or partially dependent on him! Of his $32 some goes for war stamps and bonds.

LEAVES PULPIT IN DES PLAINES TO BE CHAPLAIN

Rev. W. L. Manny Enters Naval School.

The Rev. William L. Manny, for the last year and a half minister of the Des Plaines Methodist church, who recently was commissioned a lieutenant, senior grade, in the navy, has entered the chaplain's school at Norfolk, Va., where he will receive his preliminary training. After nine weeks' study there and in Williamsburg, Va., he will be assigned to active duty.

Lt. William L. Manny.

Born in Chicago Feb. 13, 1899, Lt. Manny was graduated from the Urbana High school, Urbana, Ill., in 1918 and from the University of Illinois in 1922, where he was a student in the department of mechanical engineering.

Turned to Theology.

Becoming a student of theology at the Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, he was graduated from there in March, 1925, with the bachelor of divinity degree.

Lt. Manny is well known in the Chicago suburban area, having served as a student at the Park Villa Methodist church from 1923 to 1925 and as pastor of the Epworth Methodist church in Elgin from 1935 to 1937 before going to Des Plaines in 1941.

Daughter at U. of I.

The Manny's four children are: Clara, who is in her second year at the University of Illinois; Mary, a senior at Maine Township High school; James, a senior at Des Plaines Junior High school, and Charles, who is a student in the fifth grade at the North Division school in Des Plaines.

LT. COMM. MICHIELS WELCOMES FAMILY AT MIAMI NAVAL SCHOOL

There was a reunion last week for a navy family from Norwood Park, when Mrs. Henry Michiels, 5306 Magnet avenue, and three of the six Michiels children joined Lt. Comm. Michiels in Miami, Fla. Lt. Comm. Michiels is attending a special school in the southern city, and his family will remain in Miami for at least three weeks.

Thelast few years have been eventful for the Michielses. In November, 1941, the family moved to Hawaii to establish their home. Lt. Comm. Michiels, in service since World War I., had been on active duty in the Pacific the two years prior. Less than a month after they were settled, the Japs made their surprise attack on Pearl Harbor. Lt. Comm. Michiels, aboard ship at the time, was uninjured.

The family remained in Hawaii until April, when they were evacuated to the United States aboard a luxury liner which had been converted to a troop and hospital ship.

Since their return, the eldest son, Henry, has joined the navy and is now in Panama. The second son, Bernard, is in the army, stationed in California. Their only daughter, Mrs. Theresa Stone, makes her home in Dallas, Tex. Frank, a senior at Taft High school, hopes to follow his father and join the navy after graduation. The two younger boys, John and Pierre, are still in grammar school.

"I got the job!"

These are the days of opportunity for trained men. If you are not in the position to cash in on the offers of big pay, a short course of training can qualify you. For offers of schools teaching subjects which can help you get ahead, read the Instruction and Trade Schools columns in the Tribune want ad section today.

OLDER MEN CAN HELP!

Can you go to work? Age no longer is a barrier to employment. Your services are badly needed in stores, shops, factories, offices and other establishments. To find the largest number of offers of jobs you can do, consult the Tribune, which prints far more Help Wanted and Employment want advertising than all other Chicago newspapers combined.

"Bring the gang!"

"My new room is large enough for everybody!"

Are your present quarters too small or lacking in accommodations? It will be worth your while to consult the offers of rooms, furnished apartments, hotel rooms and apartments and housekeeping rooms in the Tribune want ad section. Regardless of the location you prefer or the rent you want to pay, you can be practically certain of finding what you want in the Tribune's selection of attractive places to live.

Because advertisers get better results from their want ads in the Tribune they place more want advertising in the Tribune than they place in all other Chicago newspapers combined.

No matter what type of home you want to buy, the location you prefer, or the price you want to pay, you will be far more certain of finding what you want thru the real estate want ads in the Tribune. SALLY, 6, SELLS A BILL OF GOODS WITH A BIG SMILE

Magazine Model Misses Cake Dividend.

Sally Scoales may be only 6, but in the last three years she's helped to sell everything from salt to insurance. The youngest daughter of Mrs. Georgia Scoales, 1309 Everett street, Des Plaines, Sally's brown eyes have sparkled out of the pages of practically every magazine on the newsstands at one time or another.

Sally Scoales.

It was just three years ago that Sally began her modeling career. Her curls were long then, and she averaged five assignments a week. The whole thing was a wonderful game to her, involving trips into the city on the train, and luncheon in a big restaurant. There also was, quite incidentally, posing under bright lights before a camera, where some man was constantly hiding his head under a big black cloth and telling her to "make believe."

Um, Yum, Chocolate!

The assignments on Sally's calendar have been assorted—she has plugged the sale of war bonds, put on a rabbit costume to sell Easter candies, looked longingly on while another model cut into a luscious chocolate cake, and was a Salt Girl, publicizing a brand widely known for its pouring qualities. Once she had an assignment to pose with a bathtub, and Mrs. Scoales bought her a new bathrobe, only to find Sally peeking out from behind a huge towel in the finished picture.

Probably the loveliest picture Sally ever had taken was the one in the Easter bunny outfit. In full color, it was enlarged several times life size, for a promotion poster. Mrs. Scoales has a copy, and plans on using it over the mantel some day. The chocolate cake pose makes Sally chuckle when she remembers that she couldn't even have a taste of the frosting, since another model had to pose with the cake after Sally was finished. "She got to eat it—I shoulda been last!" Sally sighs.

Short Cut to School.

Sally is in the first grade at Riverview school, five blocks away from the Scoales home, unless you take the "shortcut" which Sally declares is only four blocks. Her brother Billy, 10, goes to Riverview school, too, and her two sisters, Shirley, 17, and Betty, 15, attend Maine Township High school.

Soldiers and sailors and marines are getting most of the calls from commercial photographers these days. But Sally still makes an occasional trip to one of the big studios along the avenue, and Des Plaines residents still exclaim "There's that little Scoales girl again," when they open a new magazine to see Sally's smile.

Roosevelt Students Give Cakes for Service Men

Service men's centers, the U. S. O., and military police centers will benefit from a plan which Roosevelt High school students inaugurated recently. Continuing thru June, each class group has been assigned one week of each month to furnish a supply of cakes for the organizations. The seniors started off the drive on the first Friday with 60 cakes. Other classes will follow in order.

Park Ridge Girl Betrothed

Announcement has been made by Mr. and Mrs. Walter L. Snelling, 827 Vine avenue, Park Ridge, of the engagement of their daughter, Joan Marjorie, to Robert L. Lang, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Lang, 235 Ridge terrace, Park Ridge. Both young people were graduated from Maine Township High school. Lang attended the University of Illinois until his enlistment in the army signal corps.

Arlington Heights Girl to Wed Chemist

Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Lee Heimlich, 1212 Mayfair road, Stonegate, Arlington Heights, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ann Shirley McCartney, to Robert Webster Powell, son of Mrs. Mamie Powell of Birmingham, Ala. Mr. Powell is a graduate of Auburn university, where he received a degree in chemical engineering, and is employed by the du Pont company in Joliet. The wedding will take place in May.

Many kinds of annuals and vegetables can be sown directly in a cold frame, but to be successful the requirements are [1] fine, moist soil; [2] thin sowing; [3] light covering; [4] careful watering; [5] abundant ventilation as soon as the plants appear above ground, and [6] early picking off to prevent overcrowding and the likelihood of damping off.

Seedlings are delicate to handle, but they quickly respond to good treatment. Do not allow them to stand after germination for any length of time, for they must have sufficient room to develop.

Sow carefully and thinly and much of the difficulty is avoided. It is a waste to sow seed too thickly when all that is necessary is to sow carefully.

A fine seedbed is essential for the soil. Sowing fine seed too deep is often the cause of uneven germination. Heavy seed should be sown deeper than fine seed.

Tuesday, March 23

Seed will not germinate well in dry soil. Water the seedbed with a fine spray. Transplanted plants are more husky and have a much better root system than those taken directly from the seedbed.

Seedlings may be transplanted at least once into flats prior to setting in the field or garden. If it is necessary to buy a few started plants be sure to select the green, sturdy, vigorous stock.

Do the transplanting to the garden at night or during cloudy weather. Water immediately after planting and shade for a day or two. Remove the shade at night.

Wednesday, March 24

Cuttings from plants grown indoors as house plants should continue if more stock for outdoor planting is wanted. Among these are the coleus, one of the most colorful and useful decorative foliage plants among those most usually grown.

Small 2½ inch plants can be purchased and grown until about May 20 when they can be planted out of doors. One of the most desirable golden leaved varieties is golden bedder, and the red leaved sort, verschaffeltii, also is excellent. They also may be grown from seed.

Other kinds include begonia semperflorens, ageratum, verbena beauty of Oxford, and geraniums. Cannas that were placed in sand some time ago should be potted as soon as the divisions have started into growth and they will be in fine condition by planting out time.

The large tubers of the elephant ear may be started indoors. They are tropical in effect and easy to grow. Large tubers may be cut into divisions, but an eye must be left on each piece.

Thursday, March 25

Sweet peas should be sown as soon as the ground can be worked, for they like cool conditions. To sow, make a wide drill about three inches deep and sow at the rate of one pint of seed to 60 feet of drill.

Scatter the seed over the drill to avoid overcrowding; if they are crowded thin them out to give space for each plant. If more than one row is wanted, make the rows four feet apart.

Support with chicken wire or brush. This plant is well adapted to suburban sections because of the better atmospheric conditions and abundant sun. The soil should be well enriched. Mulch during hot weather to conserve the moisture.

Spray the soil around peonies, hollyhocks, and phlox with Bordeaux mixture to reduce fungous attacks. To insure a high germination of delphinium seed, soak the seed in water a few hours until the seed swells, then sow in prepared soil in flats.

Friday, March 26

Do not abandon the perennial borders, but continue to develop the plants to obtain maximum bloom. As soon as the plants show growth divide and replant the fast growing, spreading kinds, such as hardy asters, Oswego tea, Shasta daisies, false dragonhead, sweet William, phlox, and goldenglow.

If the plants have formed dense masses lift them, remove the soil, and replace them with fresh soil or give a good application of decayed manure. If this is unavailable, make an application of commercial plant food and spade it in.

Hardy chrysanthemums should be transplanted each spring. The offsets will be rooted; lift them carefully and plant about 10 inches apart if a mass effect is wanted.

Saturday, March 27

Practically all house plants may be shifted now. Use a soil consisting of one-half garden loam, one-quarter peat or leafmold, and one-quarter sand. Mix well together.

A four inch potful of commercial plant food may be incorporated in the mixture. Screen to remove large lumps. Use small pots or of a size that will be careful not to overpot. If old pots are used, clean them by soaking for 24 hours, then scrub clean.

See that the soil is moistened before using; place plenty of drainage in the bottom of the pots to avoid possible clogging, with subsequent saturated soil.

House plants have renewed activity and will require more water and some food. If a new supply of plants is needed, it is interesting to buy small pot plants and grow them on during the summer.

Prepared in coöperation with Garfield park conservatory.

CHECK UP HOME NOW FOR NEEDED SPRING REPAIRS

Minor Weak Spots May Grow Like Weeds.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

In any pre-spring checkup of the interior of your house, most homes will reveal certain small weak spots that are minor enough in themselves, but which can grow like weeds and even drive the most poised of hostesses into apology complexes.

By this time the entrance hall may be showing signs of winter's wear and ravages, and if there are scuffed places on the floor around the threshhold it may not be necessary to revarnish the entire floor.

Clean, Sand and Varnish.

One can try a varnish patchup job first—that is if the varnish is not worn thru, but only scuffed and soiled. First, all surface soil should be removed with a damp cloth wrung out from mild soap suds and dried immediately. After this one can use a fine sandpaper and then apply a fresh coat of varnish. To prevent a "patched" look the varnish should be well brushed out at the edges.

If there are scratches in the varnish they can be removed by running turpentine into them and then rubbing them lightly. In case the wear has gone thru to the bare wood the same process can be followed, except that two or more coats of varnish probably will be needed for the refinishing work. If the varnish is in a definitely bad tate all over, it is best to remove what is left of the old finish and refinish from the bare wood floor.

By spring many a house is crying out for more storage space, closets, and shelves.

Enlarge Shallow Closets.

It may be that with a comparatively small investment in materials you can have all the closet space you need. Partitions can be removed from shallow closets, and double doors set a foot farther in the room. Then a full length mirror inside one door and plenty of rods and racks, and you have increased the general utility and size of the original closet.

Shelves are another clever space saver. In the living room there may be space between a fireplace and a jog in the wall where some extra small shelves can be tucked. Or the window sills may be very narrow and you can widen them with less effort than you think, so you've room for more potted greenery and blooming plants, or more space for books and magazines.

It may be possible to install a built-in window seat in the dining room or bedroom, a seat that won't take up much more room than the window sill and yet will be a haven for hard-to-place belongings. And in bedrooms there can hardly be too many shelves if space must be garnered for children's toys, for books, and flowers, for toilet accessories over a chest of drawers, or for pads and ink over a too crowded little work table, or desk.

Shelves for Bedrooms.

If a bedroom or a sleeping porch is very small a shelf can run parallel to the bed for a magazine rack and a lamp, and eliminate the need for a table, for which there just isn't the space. Some home owners who have a shelf running across the heads of their twin beds declare they wouldn't be without it for the comfort it gives in parking space for books and candy and like accessories.

There will be more and more staying home in spare time for most home owners and detailed inspection by the owners will reveal needed repairs and small improvements, by way of stopping threatened deterioration, and adding extra spaces in the rooms we already have.

NEWS IN LIGHT OF BIBLE FLOWS AROUND WORLD

Uncle John's Comment Goes on Short Wave.

Fifteen minute programs of Bible readings and homely philosophy, recorded in a tiny Edison Park studio, are heard six days a week by persons in every part of the globe. The program, brain child of John [Uncle John] L. Meredith, 6652 Odell avenue, is aired at 8 o'clock each morning, central war time, from a powerful short wave station, HCJB, in Quito, Ecuador. Evidence that it is heard around the world comes in letters from Australia, India, Africa, Palestine, and the British West Indies.

John L. Meredith.

Mr. Meredith began his religious broadcasts over a local station back in 1920. At that time he was director of Christian activities with the Central Y. M. C. A. His Sunday afternoon program was the first religious broadcast aired from a local station.

Give Daily Programs.

Public interest caught on, and now Mr. Meredith and his wife have two daily programs from local stations, as well as the transcriptions made in their own studio from the Quito broadcasts.

Since the war began Mr. Meredith has had several interviews with the FBI. They had to be assured that his Biblical readings weren't conveying messages in code to the enemy. They must have been convinced for his programs are still on the air.

Ordinarily the Merediths record from six to eight programs of 15 minutes each in a single afternoon. Mr. Meredith has seven minutes of each program and Mrs. Meredith uses another seven minutes. The announcement takes up the remaining minute. They use no music but simply read Bible verses, and the testimonials of those who write to them from such remote points as Pitcairn Island, Iceland, Puerto Rico, and Sumatra.

Son Assists in Work.

The technical work of making the transcriptions is handled by Clifford Jacobson. The Merediths' son, John F. Meredith Jr., and his friend, James H. Pomerene, have been active in making the recording studio up to the minute in technical excellence.

Usually a dozen recordings are dispatched to Ecuador at one time. Records are sent by Pan-American Airways.

The station which broadcasts Mr. Meredith's program each morning except Monday is owned by the World Radio Missionary Fellowship, with Reuben Larson and Clarence Jones as co-directors. Mr. Meredith's program has been one of the offerings on HCJB since 1940.

Listeners Support Project.

The money which makes the broadcasts possible comes thru contributions from listeners. Thus far Mr. Meredith has had no difficulty in obtaining supplies, since so few recordings are made.

The programs of Mr. and Mrs. Uncle John have been heard in an R. A. F. bomber returning over the channel from a sweep into France. They've gone to homesick soldier boys fighting in the Pacific islands, and to wealthy cafe society in Kingston, Jamaica. Everywhere thruout the globe, English speaking people seem interested in what Mr. Meredith has to say about the news of the day in the light of fulfillment of Biblical prophecy.

Flag Dedication.

St. Gregory the Illuminator Armenian Apostolic church, 1000 North Hoyne avenue, will hold a memorial service and flag dedication for service men at 11 o'clock this morning.

TOWN OF 3,800 SETS STIFF PACE FOR RED CROSS

McHenry County Village Passes Fund Quota.

Woodstock hospital is one of the duties of the motor corps. Members of this unit are Mrs. Lawrence G. Holmes, chairman, and Mrs. Alfred Stepan Jr., Mrs. E. H. Stokes, Mrs. A. H. Henderson Jr., Mrs. Edwind N. Mayer, Mrs. Burton L. Snow, Mrs. Jerome Bond, and Mrs. Fred F. Johnson. The motor corps of the McHenry County chapter has a station wagon, purchased jointly by the 13 towns in the county, and driven by motor corps members from each town. They deliver supplies, pick up finished articles from the production room and surgical dressing center, and furnish transportation to entertainments at Camp Grant.

Swimming Champ Works.

These entertainments at Camp Grant were initiated in the county by Mrs. Alfred Stepan Jr. As Mary Lou Quinn, Mrs. Stepan has taken several national swimming championships under the Chicago banner. In spite of five small children and her motor corps work, she has found time to organize monthly entertainments for the Camp Grant hospital. For these, amateur talent and refreshments are rounded up from all over McHenry county.

Once each month, cookies, cakes, cigarets, books, magazines, and puzzles by the carload are taken to Camp Grant from the towns in the McHenry county chapter. At Christmas time, 500 gifts valued at $1 each were taken to the boys in the hospital from the county.

Study First Aid.

Junior Red Crossers in Crystal Lake, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Frank Alford, have assisted the adults with projects, have helped to furnish a sunroom at Camp Grant, and have been taking first aid classes. Mrs. Charles Ashbrook, chairman of first aid, has arranged classes in standard, advanced, and junior first aid, as well as special courses for air raid wardens. Thirty-five persons have gone on to take the first aid instructors' course in Crystal Lake. There are 50 taking the standard course, and 28 the junior course, under Mrs. Ashbrook, Miss Hazel Brand, and Miss Mary Rockenbach. Harold Snader and Mrs. Larry Holmes have just finishred two classes for air raid wardens.

Officers of the Crystal Lake branch are Harry C. Shales, chairman; Mrs. Larry Holmes, vice chairman; Mrs. Howard Tingleff, secretary; Robert Bellows, treasurer. Don A. Wicks of Woodstock is chairman of the county chapter, Mrs. Tingleff is secretary, and Don Still of Woodstock is treasurer. The entire county has gone over its $15,000 quota in the war fund drive.

CLUB MEMBERS AND PUPILS SEE WAR ERA STYLES

Members of 25 women's club and pupils from 18 high schools recently attended a war time fashion review on the northwest side. The fashions were divided into three classes: dressy clothes of the "volunteer" type, casual suits and dresses for "commissioned" war duties, and "duration" clothes wihch consist of job uniforms, house frocks, and overall coats.

Clothes for a purpose—clothes to last longer and look better and are made of stronger materials—were featured in the style show which was directed by June Marlowe, fashion director of Wieboldt Stores, Inc.

The presentation and styles were planned to interest the homemaker, business girl, "furlough bride," war plant worker, and junior miss. It was the third of a series of six showings of war time fashions being held by the stores in diffierent communities of the city.

Stanley Johnston Talks on Sportsmen Spotlight.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent and author of "Queen of the Flat Tops," will be a guest of Bob Becker on his program over W-G-N at 3 p. m. today. Johnston will tell about dogs that go to sea and dogs he has seen in battle. Becker will also give a report on the army's sentry dog training program at Fort Robinson, Nebraska.

W-G-N's new chief of production, Lewis James, has been in radio as a tenor since 1921. He's one of the real old timers. For a decade from 1926 to 1936 he was featured with the Revelers, probably the best known of all radio quartets.

What was formerly the Ben Bernie show on CBS, because of the illness of the Old Maestro, is now "Keep the Home Fires Burning," a program of relaxing music, addressed mainly to workers in war plants. Jack Fulton Jr., formerly tenor soloist on the show, has gone east and is singing with Bob Crosby's orchestra.

Something new at W-G-N is the feminine sound effects technician. First of her sex to undertake this rôle at the station is Genevieve Capstaff. W-G-N is feeling the man power pinch. Approximately 50 per cent of the station's male personnel, as of Dec. 7, 1941, has enlisted for service in the army, navy, or answered the call for other war duties.

The National Association of Broadcasters will hold a conference at the Palmer House from April 27 to 29 to consider the rôle of domestic radio stations with regard to the war effort. Government officials will be on hand to let the broadcasters hear their viewpoints.

'BITTERSWEET' IS NEXT OPERETTA IN AIR THEATER

Noel Coward's "Bittersweet" will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday over W-G-N and Mutual Marion Claire will be starred.

Miss Claire will be supported by of Sari Linden. The rôle is a familiar one to Miss Claire. She appeared in the stage presentation of the operetta and has sung the rôle before on Theater of the Air productions.

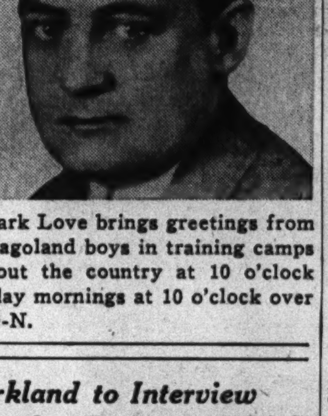
Miss Claire will be supported by an augmented chorus, a cast of well known radio actors to play the speaking rôles, and the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber. Robert Trendler will direct the chorus.

All the familiar Coward songs, "I'll See You Again," "Tokay," "Zigeuner," "Call of Life," and "Small Café," will be presented.

NBC Symphony to Present D. Milhaud's Symphony

Leopold Stokowski and the NBC Symphony orchestra will present Darius Milhaud's Symphony at 4 o'clock this afternoon over WMAQ-NBC. The work is in four parts: "Pastoral," "Tres Vif," "Tres Modere," and "Final." Another works will be Stokowski's own symphonic transcription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Brings Greetings



Mark Love brings greetings from Chicagoland boys in training camps thruout the country at 10 o'clock Sunday mornings at 10 o'clock over W-G-N.

Markland to Interview Garden Expert on W-G-N

L. A. Hawkins, garden advisor of the International Harvester company, will be interviewed by Ben Markland on W-G-N's "Know Your Onions," farm series at 9:30 a. m. today. Hawkins will discuss company gardens. The Harvester company and many other industrial concerns this year are arranging to provide space on their grounds so that employés will be able to cultivate gardens to help stem the shortage in foods.

Quiz Kids to Broadcast from Philadelphia Today

The Quiz Kids will stage a huge war bond rally in Convention hall, Philadelphia, Pa., as part of their program at 6:30 p. m. today over WENR-Blue. Purchase of a war bond will be required as admission to the hall, which seats 1,300. Participating in the show will be Joel Kupperman, 6; Ruthie Duskin, 8; Gerard Darrow, 10; Harve Fischman, 12, and Richard Williams, 13.

Billie Burke on Air.

Billie Burke, movie comedienne, will appear as guest on Only Yesterday show at 7 o'clock tonight over WBBM-CBS. The regular cast includes Benny Rubin, Mary Small, Perry Como, Don Walker's orchestra, and Bobby Tucker's chorus.

HUTCHINS TO BE SPEAKER TODAY ON ROUND TABLE

President Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago will appear on the U. of C. Round Table at 1 o'clock this afternoon over WMAQ-NBC. The topic, "Education for Freedom," was selected in coöperation with the American Association of School Administrators now holding its annual convention "by air" because of the war. The Round Table will discuss the rôle of liberal education in war time, the training programs o fthe services, including those to be established in colleges, and the plight of small liberal arts colleges. Other speakers will be Lt. Comm. Alvin McKean and Ralph Tyler.

Arthur Hale Will Start New Series of Comments

Arthur Hale will start a new series of his "Confidentially Yours," comments on W-G-N at 9:30 p. m. Tuesday. The program will be presented every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday at the same time. URGE MORE WEST SIDE WAR GARDENS

WEST SUBURBAN YOUTHS SIGN UP FOR FARM WORK

High School Course to Give Training.

Thirty-two boys at Riverside-Brookfield High school have signed up for this summer to help solve the farm labor problem. Wednesday they will attend their first class in agriculture, and during the coming weeks will work two half Saturdays on nearby farms. With 10 hours of theory and 10 hours of practical experience, it is expected that the boys will be able to make a real contribution to food production.

Unlike boys from the Chicago schools who will be sent in groups on fruit picking and canning projects, the Riverside-Brookfield boys, as with others from Cook county suburban schools, will be individualistic in their patriotic adventure. Their work, including all types of farming, will be on farms within a 25 mile radius of their homes.

Farming as an essential war industry found appeal with Riverside-Brookfield boys when it was first suggested to them by Supt. I. E. Haebich and R. B. Lybeck, dean of boys, following a meeting with Noble J. Puffer, county superintendent of schools.

Says It's No Lark.

Addressing an assembly, Mr. Lybeck spoke of the opportunity for patriotic service at a time when American farmers have been asked to grow more food than ever before. He warned against looking upon the program as a lark. Boys, he said, could not be trained in 20 hours to be farmers, but the course would provide information that would help them to be of more service.

The call for volunteers brought the raising of 100 hands, but as further meetings were held, the personnel of the proposed class was reduced to the enthusiastic 32.

L. G. Thompson, teacher of social science at the school, was appointed by Supt. Haebich to instruct the new class. Mr. Thompson, during his boyhood, was active on a farm near Hillsboro, Ill.

New York Native Enrolls.

Among the first to enroll was Frank Schips, a senior, born in a suburb of New York City, who for three or four years worked in the summer on his grandmother's farm in the Catskill mountains. He was proud of the fact that last year he had been hired on a dairy farm at real wages. He said his ambition all along had been to follow farming as a career.

Other members of the class who were interviewed were Edward Orr, Albert Nobis, Louis Kroll, Paul Maresh, and Jack Shahan.

Edward, a junior, said he had visited relatives on a farm in Wisconsin. Albert, a sophomore, born in Chicago and a resident of Brookfield for nine years, said he had never been on a farm but was interested in live stock. Louis, a senior, also had visited relatives on a farm in Wisconsin, where he had helped to haul hay. He thought that once he had learned farm work he would like to stay by it.

Paul, a sophomore, had spent a day or so with friends on a farm in Indiana and had enjoyed the experience. He said he had raised chickens. Jack, a sophomore, spent a week on a farm in Indiana last summer.

Study U. of I. Textbook.

The textbook to be studied by the class has been prepared by the college of agriculture at the University of Illinois and has been issued by the Illinois State Council of Defense. The book points out that since World War I. agriculture has become so highly mechanized that many farmers no longer keep horses. The machines represent large investments and many of them can be seriously damaged by improper care and handling.

Getting used to the change from city life, living with the farm family, and taking part in rural community affairs, it is explained are all as much a part of farm life as the work to be done.

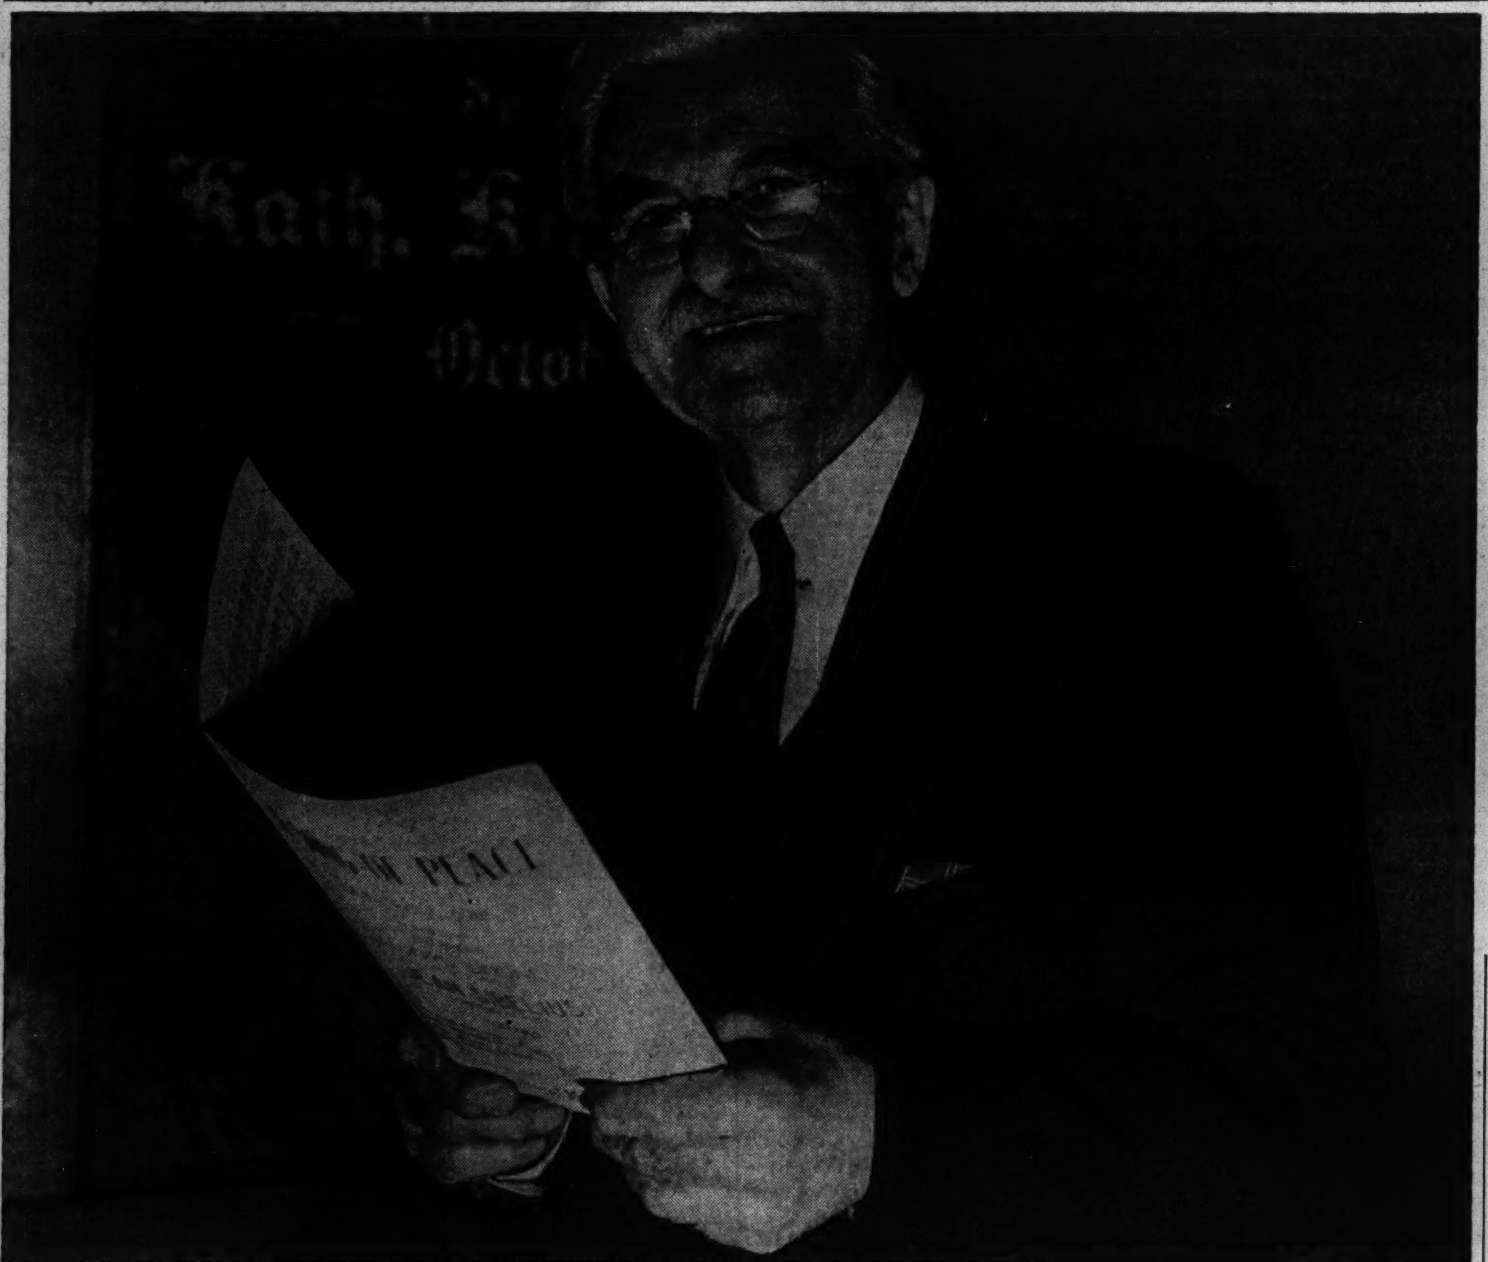
DOWNERS GROVE CANDIDATES FOR MAYOR TO TALK

Candidates for village offices in Downers Grove have accepted an invitation by the Fairview Community council to attend a meeting at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the Downers Grove Presbyterian church. N. H. Fishel and Carlyle B. Stair, both condidates for mayor, accepted the invitation for their groups.

The two candidates for mayor each will be allowed to speak five minutes. Candidates for commissioner will be given three minutes each. After the talks, members of the audience will be permitted to ask questions.

All residents of the village are invited to attend the town meeting.

Singing for Fun Has Been Catholic Casino Male Chorus' Purpose for 71 Years



Seventy-five year old John Zimmerman, 1544 North Oakley boulevard, is one of the older members of the Catholic Casino male chorus, organized in 1872, which has held to an active program ever since. The chorus is composed of young and old who come from all walks of life. Zimmerman is a retired salesman and has been in the chorus for 32 years. [TRIBUNE Photos by Julius Gantter.]

The youngest and the oldest sit side by side at the Tuesday night rehearsals at Kolping house, 811 Oakdale avenue. Eugene Rieth of Cicero, a war worker, is one of the youngest members from the west side, and one of the oldest is Michael Brisch of River Forest. It was Rieth's grandfather, Peter Rieth, who was one of the seven founders of the chorus. Brisch has been a member for 40 years.

A large percentage of the more than 60 members seldom miss a Tuesday night practice for they never know when they might be called on to perform in public. They have taken part in a number of W-G-N Christmas programs and sing on the Chicagoland Church hour over W-G-N. Then, too, the practices are fun and nearly all the choristers would forgo almost anything else for a Tuesday night of singing.

Chanute Opens New Door to Skilful Hands

BY ROSCOE SIMMONS.

Chanute, Ill., March 20.—Chanute field, one of the most famous of American air training bases, is more campus than camp. It is school and college, a university of specialization. It is heart of the army air forces technical command, altho headquarters of the command is in Knollwood, N. C.

Situated almost mid-Illinois, the sweep of its acres, the architecture of countless buildings, the earnest demeanor of its student soldiers, all speak the spirit of this laboratory of flight.

Here assemble American youth, without distinction as to race or color, to study side by side how to keep fighting ships in the air. Without Chanute and its dozen sister schools, the epic story of American air fighters could not be told.

Trainees Picked for Aptitude.

Trainees reach Chanute not by their own choice, but because they were picked from their units for aptness; as fit to go on with higher technical knowledge required to "keep 'em flying." Here those who study flying almost never fly.

Chanute is representative of the integration of every creed and color and race into the unanimity of war. It is so with the student body and so with its "faculty."

Glamour of the military camp—drill, marching, music—is missing here. Nor are the skies over Chanute filled with ships. But as a technical command Chanute cannot possibly be second to any similar center in a world of war.

Send Ships Up Right.

The stirring motto of the army air forces training—SUSTINEO ALAS—was repeated to a colored [soldier] student. "I know," he said, "but I was never much on Latin, but I'll do my best to send the ships up right, and if they're downed I'll send 'em right back up all right again."

Subjects taught include parachute rigging, link trainer [where those who teach flying themselves may not know how to fly], teletype machinery, sheet metal, welding, heat treating, electrical devices, instruments of the earth and the heavens, special purpose vehicles, and the weather.

"God's Chilluns Got Wings."

One of the many colored boys, shaping an after-the-war career for machinery, was reminded of the English version of the command's motto—"I Sustain the Wings." "Well," he said, "since all God's chilluns got wings, I ought to be good working with 'em."

Every day is Commencement day at Chanute and the graduates are dispatched to ground centers stretching across the land. Each student studies to become expert on one thing; seeks to master one part of an airship. Marks here are not made on ancestry but on industry, attention, aptitude. When the graduates move out, they

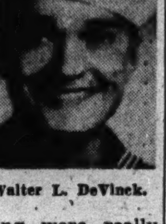
The War as Fighters See It

From Walter L. DeVinck, electrician's mate, 2d class, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. August DeVinck, 2212 Sherman avenue, Evanston. DeVinck, in the navy since December, 1938, was at Pearl Harbor, participated in four naval battles in one of which his ship was sunk. After being on a small island for a week the survivors were picked up and taken to Australia. DeVinck made the trip to America on an oil tanker.

Everything here [America] is like an unbelievable dream, for I've spent so much time convincing myself that I'd never reach the United States again until after the war.



Walter L. DeVinck.

"The food is like —— well my first meal was so good for a change from those I'd eaten over there that tears of appreciation and thanksgiving were really hard to hold back. I can safely say that you can smell the difference in the air alone, taste America in everything you eat.

"It's absolutely incredible to notice such tremendous differences between the quality of things you hear, see, smell, feel, etc., here and in other lands. Mother, I sincerely believe that there was a garden of forbidden fruit—a God's special creation of the best which we now call America. I'm still so nervous and jumpy about being here that I just can't settle down to a normal state of mind just yet.

"Words, written or spoken, will never reveal to the people of this country just what a paradise they live in. The only ones who will realize are those now fighting on the war fronts—the sons and daughters who are now in no position to relay the facts that all American people should know. The man behind the man behind the gun is the one on whom we depend to win this war.

"Man, what a treat; desks to write on, soft lounge chairs, good radio programs, soda fountains, canteens, cokes, clean shower rooms, plenty of liberty, and time off and beautiful women are all over the place. The first pretty girl I saw on the train going across the bridge to the city looked so welcome to my eyes that I wanted to stare at her.

"I feel like some one who is getting a new start in life—a new chance to survive. I'm happy again."

From Corp Robert E. Witt to his "Dear Mom"—Mrs. Edna Witt, 3735 Bosworth avenue. Corp. Witt, member of a coast artillery unit, was reported missing in action after the fall of Corregidor in May, 1942. His mother believes Corp. Witt to be a prisoner of the Japs.

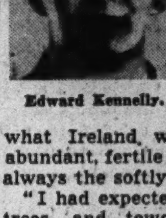
"I may be a little early for this but you can keep this part of the letter on file for when I get home. Here 'tis, the first dinner I would like to have you cook for me after I get off the train. Of course I'll want . . . over to eat with me and you can invite any one you wish to but—ah, yes—the menu.

Robert E. Witt.

"Let's see now, nice pork roast, mashed potatoes and gravy, pickles and olives, waldorf salad, creamed wax beans, applesauce, sweet potatoes and a pineapple juice drink. For dessert, coffee, one of your chocolate layer cakes [is three layers too much?], one of grandma's and one of Aunt Anna's apple pies and a big dish of chocolate pudding with lots of whipped cream. Do you think it's possible or am I asking too much?"

From Corp. Edward Kennelly, infantry regiment medical detachment, in Hawaii, to his friend, James W. Conklin, 5967 North Oconto avenue. Corp. Kennelly married Miss Carlotta Nelson of Park Ridge shortly before he sailed. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin M. Kennelly, 5647 North Harlem avenue. Corp. Kennelly is a graduate of St. Ignatius High school.

"The islands are a revelation and a disappointment. My literary perusals had led me to expect too much. When the island first appeared out of the mists of the sea, a brilliant emerald mound rising like a green felt poker table from the very lap of Neptune, it was the picture that I had always held in my mind of what Ireland would be like, lush, abundant, fertile greenness, moist and always the softly rolling sea.



Edward Kennelly.

"I had expected hot sands, bamboo trees, and towering coconuts. Of course they are all growing here but not in the amount that you would expect. And I can assure you no Hedy Tondelayo in brilliant sarong offered to make 'tiffin' for me. As a matter of fact what most of the kids wear here might be called a modified zoot suit, sans shoes, of course.

"When we disembarked we were loaded into trucks and sent to our destination. If you can imagine a tour thru the Lincoln park conservatory on a tricycle you have a faint idea of the beauty of the glorious flowers along the roadside.

From 1st Lt. William G. Meade, member of an ordnance company in North Africa, to his wife, Mrs. Louise Meade, 1109 North Long avenue, Oak Park. Meade, a graduate of the University of Illinois in 1938, was employed as a chemist in the Riverdale works of the Acme Steel company, until he entered the army in May, 1941.

The days are hot and the nights are cold. The dust is terrific and when it does rain—which is seldom—it turns into a nice gooey mud. The climate isn't too bad in many respects, however, and it certainly beats that of Ireland or England.

"These folks are a strange lot. Some of the homes are modern and nice, and some of the people are well educated and clean. Others are a strange mixture of races. Some of them look as if they never had a bath

TRIBUNE WILL PRINT 3 DETAILED LETTERS FROM YANKS WEEKLY

The War As Fighters See It department provides a medium wherein letters from service men and service women received by relatives and friends may have a wider circle of appreciative readers.

That more space may be given to letters which, because of their interest, merit more than excerpts, but three letters will be selected for publication each week. The briefest of letters, however, will be given equal consideration. Even the postal card message may contain a nugget of originality. For each letter printed in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, $5 will be paid the sender.

Senders of letters are asked to comply with the following suggestions:

Send COPIES of the treasured letters, do NOT send the originals. Do not send framed photographs or scrapbooks. THE TRIBUNE cannot be responsible for letters lost in transmission, nor return the letters.

Photographs of the letter writer and a brief biography of the writer are desired. Those requesting return of the pictures should write the request and address on the back of the pictures, but THE TRIBUNE regrets that it cannot accept responsibility for such return.

SPRING ADVENT ADDS IMPETUS TO OCD APPEAL

Prepare to Plow 75 More Plots.

With the arrival of spring, west side OCD is making a special appeal to all residents to establish war gardens as soon as possible. Extensive plans have been underway for several months for community gardens so that any one who does not have a plot of his own may have garden space near his home.

Sixteen large gardens, accommodating from 8 to 200 families each, were plowed last fall and preparations are being made to plow at least 75 more this spring. Residents who do not have gardens of their own or know where additional plots are available are being asked to contact their block captains or block garden wardens.

Name Garden Chairmen.

Frank Balthis, horticulturist at Garfield park conservatory, has been appointed war garden chairman for the west side. The community chairmen to assist him are:

Community 2—Central west side, 800 South Halsted street, The Rev. Raymond Laury, chairman, Mario Defalco, co-chairman; community 3—Lower west side, 1831 South Blue Island avenue, Arthur G. Moyel; community 4—South Lawndale, 2504 South Kedzie avenue, Mrs. Marie Melberg; community 5—North Lawndale, 3321 Roosevelt road, Mrs. Emery Bass; community 6—East Garfield, 221 South Kedzie avenue, Frank Balthis.

Community 7—West Town, 1615 North Pulaski road, M. A. Artner; community 8—West Garfield, 31 South Pulaski road, Philip Scanlon; community 9—South Austin, 211 South Cicero avenue, George T. Gonoar; community 10—Central Austin, 5609 Race avenue, Frank L. Bennett; community 11—North Austin, 747 North Cicero avenue, Charles Glaser, and community 12—Medical center, 2350 Roosevelt road, the Rev. Laury.

Appointed in Suburbs.

Suburban garden chairmen are C. C. Estes of the Forest Preserve district who is division chief and Mrs. W. G. McKinney of Maywood, general war garden chairman for division 11.

Community chairmen are George Clark, Bellwood; L. J. Novotny, Berkeley; Thomas Molaey, Broadview; Miles Sharpless, Forest Park; Mrs. Joseph H. Engleman, Hillside; C. G. Beck, Hines; Mrs. E. K. Chronister, chairman, and F. F. Carson, co-chairman, Maywood; Leo Schwinghammer, North Lake village; Karl F. Johnson, chairman, and Mrs. W. R. Stephens, co-chairman, Oak Park, and Mrs. R. B. McCoppin, Westchester. Chairmen for Melrose Park, River Forest, and Stone Park have not been selected.

Applications for a community garden may be obtained from the community chairman or the local block garden warden. A written permit from the owner must be obtained before a vacant lot can be cultivated into a community garden.

Plan to Test Soil.

Before the plot is designated as a community garden the soil will be tested by park district experts. Later as many as can will be plowed by the park district which is equipped with three plows. Wherever possible and for those who wish to get in some early plantings before the tractor plow can get to their garden, people are urged to spade part or all of the garden. In the suburban areas arrangements must be made with local farmers to plow the gardens. No garden which was plowed last fall will be plowed again this spring.

Amateur gardeners who have had no previous experience are being urged to keep their gardens small the first year, Balthis said. Bulletins for various phases of gardening are being prepared and distributed by the west side OCD. Early gardeners who wish to start their seeds indoors before the frost is out of the ground may receive instructions prepared by the park district.

Community gardens which were plowed last fall and will be available this spring are:

Thirty-second street south to the railroad at 33d street, from Keeler to Kildare avenues; one entire city block; accommodates 100 to 200 families.

4525-39 Diversey boulevard; 75 by 100 feet; accommodates 29 families.

CASINO SINGERS KEEP TUNE THRU SEVENTY YEARS

Club Formed After Great Chicago Fire.

BY EILEEN BURKE.

In 1872, when Chicago was still smoke stained and bewildered after the great fire of the previous year, the Catholic Casino male chorus was organized. During the period of readjustment, seven civic minded parishioners of St. Francis of Assisi church, 1206 Newberry avenue, saw a way to safeguard the religious and social welfare of their community thru founding an organization which would exemplify the best in choral singing with its attendant good fellowship. So they got together in the parish hall and formed the Casino chorus.

The wobbly little organization grew up with unexpected suddenness. Its membership became city-wide. Business men and professional men—men with white collar jobs and those with "overall" jobs—all gathered to blend lusty voices at the weekly Casino song fests.

Must Love Singing.

There were only two membership requirements. They were a love of singing and the quality of being a "good fellow." A nonprofit organization, the 71 year old chorus has constantly served its members and the public with the same hearty good fellowship which colors its Tuesday night meetings at 811 Oakdale avenue.

It is traditional that the chorus stand by each members in his joy as well as his sorrow. Singing at the wedding or the requiem mass of a member or friend of the organization is regarded as an important duty by all other members.

Songs for Unfortunates.

Thruout its existence, the Casino has repeatedly furnished musical concerts for inmates of hospitals, orphanages, and old peoples' homes. The organization has supplied choral music for religious institutions on special feast days, at jubilees and dedications. It has always stood ready to lend voices in sacred or secular music to honor a church or civic dignitary.

During the Century of Progress exposition, the Casino was the first male chorus to advertise Chicago over the NBC network. The group also sings on the Chicagoland church hour over W-G-N and has taken part in a number of W-G-N Christmas programs. A standing engagement is the singing of a requiem mass at St. Joseph's cemetery every Decoration day.

Sixty Faithful Members.

The Casino now has more than 60 members who come faithfully to its weekly meetings. Some of the older members are walking with canes, but their voices still retain much of the quality they had as young men. In many instances, fathers sing beside their sons. The oldest living member is Lawrence Schlitt of 5417 North Glenwood avenue, who joined the Casino in 1889.

Every rehearsal is closed with the Lord's prayer, sung for absent members represented by the 14 stars on the Casino's service flag. One of the stars is for Capt. Adalbert Huguelet, former director of the chorus, who entered the army last fall and is now overseas.

Youngest director in the history of the chorus is Gregory Konold of 2217 Ridge avenue, Evanston, who succeeded Capt. Huguelet. Konold is also on the music staff of De Paul university and directs the glee clubs at Rosary college, River Forest, and at Loretto High school.

Many in Church Choirs.

As a whole, the selection of voices does not present a problem to the Casino because almost all members sing in their various parish choirs.

Members who for some reason are prevented from attending rehearsals with reasonable regularity become, automatically, passive members. The same rule applies to those members who are aging and feel that their voices are no longer a musical asset to the group. In this way, the stability of the chorus and the progress of rehearsals is assured, said Konold.

Preparing Annual Concert.

Rehearsals are now being held for the Casino's 71st annual concert which will be given Sunday, May 16, at St. Alphonsus Athenæum auditorium, 2936 North Southport avenue. Forgoing its usual custom of holding the concert downtown, the Casino has planned an informal program.

Plans for the concert are under the direction of Theodore K. Handing of 1462 West Balmoral avenue who is serving his fourth term as president of the Casino. Assisting him are Adalbert Kirchten, chairman of the board, and Leo S. Elfel, vice president of the organization.

Other officers are Anthony J. Jansen, treasurer; Perry Duderstadt, recording secretary, and Frank W. Wilkin, corresponding secretary. Directors are William G. Sturm, Paul Donnelly, Michael Sasgen, Adam Frederich, Michael Brisch, Herman Schlitt, Patrick O'Malley, Mathias J. Follman, and Peter Kandel. Paul Richard of 619 North Carpenter street, is historian.

WEST SIDER AIDS OTHER SHUT-INS IN HOME WORK

Hose Mending Machine Is Morale Builder.

Altho only three feet tall, 42 year old Margaret Esther Cunningham is doing a full sized war job for women's morale. Since last November she has mended on the average 65 nylon and silk hose each week, no small task for any person.

A special machine cut down to her size was installed in her home by a hosiery company and Miss Cunningham spends many hours a day before the large front windows of her home at 420 North Le Claire avenue guiding the automatic needle which sews up runs.

Finds Work Plentiful.

She likes best to work with nylon, one of the first shortages to affect the home front. "Work is plentiful," she says, "and quite a few of the stockings are nylon. Women are hanging on to them as long as they can."

Altho she has plenty to keep her busy now and she likes her work, things didn't always look so bright for Miss Cunningham. Many years were spent in a constant struggle to gain her health and to get a steady job.

She tried earning her living at many things. An art course helped her to paint greeting cards. While spending six years in Texas near the southern border, she learned to do Mexican embroidery and she was an assistant at Spalding school, her alma mater, for several years.

Likes Regular Job.

"There isn't much money in piece work," she relates, "and I wanted a regular job in which I could pay my share at home." She lives in a second floor apartment with two sisters and a brother. Outside of the six years in Texas, Miss Cunningham always has been a west sider.

A bad case of rickets kept her from walking until she was 20 years old. After winning that battle, in which doctors repeatedly had discouraged her, she began a new struggle for a job and rebuffs came even faster. Employers refused to consider any one whose legs and arms were too short to allow her to board street cars and to climb tall steps. Now sitting at her mending machine she can look back on those hard years and smile with satisfaction at her own achievements.

"I have proven, not only to myself, but to other handicapped people, that we can hold jobs if given a chance and the right ones," she states.

Guild for Shut-Ins.

Miss Cunningham has outside interests, too, and one of the most important of these is the Opportunity Guild for Shut-Ins. She recently was reëlected president for the second term.

Her brown eyes will twinkle and her gray head bob excitedly when she talks about the guild, a social organization started a few years ago. They have monthly parties at the Legion hall at Sacramento boulevard and Belmont avenue. The organization is city-wide and when Miss Cunningham can find some one to take her she visits as many of the members as possible.

"I try to find part time employment for them," she says. "But it's not easy. Not only are jobs scarce, but the people have the attitude that it is no use."

Sought Job List.

Miss Cunningham got her job thru the Illinois Association for the Crippled when she went to its offices at 35 East Wacker drive last fall to get a list of jobs for some of the guild members. The association, which will start its annual Easter seal sale Monday, March 29, was founded in 1936. Since the beginning of the war it has placed more than 100 handicapped people in jobs once held by able bodied workers now called into the army and navy.

"Handicapped people often underrate their own usefulness," she believes. "And they need some one or some organization like the association to give them a boost. As for myself, well—they made it possible for me to get my first steady job."

GRANT AND LEE WORK AMICABLY AS 'Q' TRAINMEN

Instead of fighting the war all over again whenever they meet, "Gen." Grant and "Gen." Lee work together in perfect harmony as ticket collectors aboard the Burlington commutation train from Downers Grove which arrives at 8:33 o'clock each morning at the Union station. Sherman Grant, 3312 Schubert avenue, has been on the run ever since it was established. F. F. Lee of St. Charles has been working with Grant for several months. Both have been dubbed "General" by the passengers.

CICERO COUNCIL ASKS FOR DRIVING CARE AS WAR AID

"Let us be more considerate while driving and give the United States a chance to win this war," said Eleanor Micka, speaking for the Cicero Safety council. "It is my belief that tho the United States is at war there are a few people who, for their pleasure, think very little of winning it."

According to information based on an investigation made by Sergt. R. H. Techen of the traffic department of the Cicero police, 821 accidents occurred in Cicero during 1942, or an average of more than two each day.

The Cicero Safety council report continues:

"Six of the 821 accidents were fatal and probably involved the use of the much needed surgical instruments and medicines of war.

"Because of the actions of these careless and thoughtless individuals, doctors and nurses are called away from their war time duties.

"Even tho these accident rates are lower than last year's total of 1,122 with 12 fatalities, they are large considering the fact that fewer people are driving cars today.

"Most of the accidents involved men between the ages of 25 and 34 and happened during the daytime. The streets, when wet and muddy, claimed most of the accidents.

"Persons involved in a major portion of the accidents lived outside of Cicero, and they claimed three of the six fatalities. On Saturday, between the hours of 4 p. m. and 6 p. m., the most accidents occurred. Sunday ranked second."

YANK TAKES TIME IN ARMY TO WOO MUSE WITH SONG

Stan Nawrocki, 2645 North Sacramento avenue, at 28, is a private in the army at Fort Dix, New Jersey—and composer of "I Could Go on Dreaming," a popular song just published.

Pvt. Nawrocki who started to work in a machine shop shortly after leaving Schurz High school, has long been interested in music. Away from his work, he spent his spare time at his hobby, and succeeded five years ago in publishing his first song, "One Night of Heaven."

A trimmer at a tool and die manufacturing plant, at the time of his induction into the army in September of last year, he lived with his three sisters and brother at their Sacramento avenue home.

PROPHECY MADE IN 1913 FOR GLEN ELLYN FULFILLED

Opened Cornerstone Tells a Story.

The opportunity of looking over the contents of a corner stone was experienced recently by members of the Methodist church in Glen Ellyn when the old brick Methodist church was razed.

The stone was laid Sunday afternoon, July 27, 1913. Included in the documents placed in the box was a copy of the village newspaper, The Glen Ellyan.

Prophetically, a contributor wrote in the paper of 30 years ago:

"To enhance the value of our real estate is worth while. But to establish a community 'where wealth accumulates and men decay' is not rendering the highest service for Glen Ellyn. If the moral tone of the community is not elevated we shall have failed at the most vital point.

"The First Methodist Episcopal church, which is erecting a modern brick structure, the first brick church in the community, on the corner of Duane street and Forest avenue, is rendering a service for Glen Ellyn that is worthy of the highest praise.

"No other structure that could be erected would so permanently enhance the value of real estate, draw a better class of people to our town, or contribute to the moral uplift of the community so effectively. This progressive institution deserves the support of every citizen, and may properly be termed a real booster."

MAYWOOD DRAMA GROUP TO STAGE PLAY TONIGHT

Veteran Players to Act at Emerson School.

"Ladies in Retirement," three act mystery play of stage and screen, will be presented tonight by the Maywood Players at Emerson school, 4th avenue and Washington boulevard, Maywood.

Twyla Wakeman.

The Maywood Players, sponsored by the Maywood Recreation board, have been active in the suburb for nearly 20 years. Previously, this season, the group gave a successful performance of "Kitty Foyle." The type of plays chosen for an indication of the group's insistence in bringing modern stage offerings to their audiences.

Plaque Honors Those in Service.

War has caused gaps in the ranks of the players and these are honored with a plaque containing their names which is placed each performance night in the lobby. The list of absent ones includes Carolyn Bludorn, of the WAVES, Harry Abbott, Edward Damer, Charles Rhodes, Ray Jensen, Ernest Hamilton, and Ernest Stewart, of the army, and William Bell, Robert Knouf, and Earl York, of the navy.

Producer Allen York is directing the cast of eight players in "Ladies in Retirement" as follows:

Marie McElroy as Lucy Gilhan, Lucille Rende as Leonora Fiske, Twyla Wakeman as Ellen Creed, Phillip Swanson as Albert Feather, Betty Wood as Louisa Creed, Doris Eckstrom as Emily Creed, June Lueck as Sister Theresa, and Wendell Wilsey as Bates.

Proviso Trio to Play.

The Proviso String trio will provide music between acts. Members of the trio are Ray O'Nell, violin; Miriam Elsasser, accompanist; and Eunice Jacobek, 'cello.

Careful attention has been given to details of the scene setting, an English country home in the 1885 period, which is used for the three acts. Costumes have been dug up from old trunks in Maywood to be loaned for the performance.

OLD NEIGHBORS HAVE HIGH JINX WITH A TIN BAND

Gads Hill Oldsters Meet Weekly for Frolic.

It is only a tin band but it provides music for the Old Neighbors club which meets each Wednesday morning in Gads Hill center, 1919 West Cullerton street. The instruments are toy drums, cymbals, and other rhythmic tools, but with them the Old Neighbors can beat out "Golden Slippers," "Pop Goes the Weasel," "Li'l Liza Jane," "The Girl I Left Behind Me" and other old tunes.

The Old Neighbors haven't a member under 65 years old and the old airs are the most popular. Each week they meet in the community settlement house to practice. Their objective always is a monthly party held on the third Saturday afternoon of each month.

Walk to Meetings.

The average age of the Old Neighbors is 70 years. One is 90 and two are past 83. Having no other way of coming to the weekly meetings and monthly parties, the majority of them walk, often as far as a mile.

"I can't stand sitting at home when I know the others are at the settlement having fun," they say. And so the attendance remains fairly regular regardless of the weather.

Outside of the orchestra and dancing the old quadrilles and polkas, most of them tell you that the dainty cakes and coffee served by the settlement's board is a big drawing card. Each one brings his own lunch on Wednesdays, but refreshments are served at the monthly parties. The Easter season brings special delicacies; March means St. Patrick's refreshments; Christmas cookies are served during the holidays, and other special events of the year are observed.

Prepare Apt Programs.

Just as the seasons influence the refreshments so do they shape the programs. There's a Thanksgiving program in November, a Christmas tree and skits in December, and for several weeks preceding Easter the orchestra practices special Holy songs.

Albert Tupper, 2135 West 18th place, has been temporary president of the group ever since it was organized six years ago. "We've never gotten around to electing a regular president. I'm always at the meetings so they must depend on me to take care of things," he explains.

Whenever a party begins to lag it is usually Tupper who can pep things up. He almost always has his small wooden doll with him which he stands on a flat board and by gentle tapping makes it dance in time with the music.

They have come from various walks of life. One woman who was a saxophone player with a circus in her younger days now plays the instrument in the Old Neighbors orchestra. They can't all speak English, but they can all understand a good time.

Start in Jig Time.

At the first sound from the orchestra each one jumps to outdo his neighbor in his version of the jig. Usually the older the member the longer he lasts in the dance. Later shuffleboard and quieter games are played.

Any one is welcome to the Old Neighbors club. Starting with a small group six years ago the little organization has grown to more than 50 members. Each summer is climaxed with an outdoor picnic given by the settlement board.

"Sometimes I don't feel very well when I first come to a party but I always go away feeling fine," one 75 year old woman explained. "And I guess that goes for all of us."

BUSINESS WOMEN OF WEST AREA TO MEET TOMORROW

Members of the West Area Business and Professional Women's club will hear a panel discussion on "The Business and Professional Women in the War Effort" at a 6:30 o'clock dinner meeting tomorrow night in Graemere hotel, 113 North Homan avenue. Speakers will be Vera Binks, president of the Illinois B. P. W. federation; Estelle Northum, president of Zonta B. P. W. club; Mrs. J. F. Leavens, American Association of University Women, and Matilda Fenberg, West Area B. P. W. club.

Engaged

The engagement of Miss Clare Viglione to Donald Vincent Sargol was announced recently by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Herman Viglione, 5531 Congress street. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. August P. Sargol, 5679 Washington boulevard.

Doll and Board Dance Enlivens Party

The War as Fighters See It

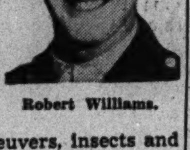
and I am firmly convinced that this is true in most cases. They are in rags mostly. They wear their clothes until they rot and then they patch them and wear them until the patches rot.

"Some live with their chickens, goats, and sheep, all in the same room. They beat their animals and their wives. They steal anything, and I guess some would probably slit your throat for a dime or less.

"The animals look like they are almost starved to death. The dogs used to dig up our garbage as fast as we would bury it and then some of the native kids would chase the dogs so they could get at the garbage. I guess much of this was due to the fact that the Germans took every bit of available food but I don't doubt that much of this went on before. Needless to say the situation is improving considerably since we took over.

From Aviation Cadet Robert F. Williams to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Williams, 3432 North Albany avenue. Williams, a graduate of Roosevelt High school, studied electrical communications at the University of Colorado. He is stationed now at Enid, Okla.



Robert Williams.

"Just another day and I'll be going into my third year in the army. That's a long time for a guy like me to be hanging around with but one employer. Now I look back to the dreadful days of Camp Wallace and its mud, the Fort Bliss auxiliary camp and its sand and wind, Fort Bliss proper in brick barracks, then the Louisiana maneuvers, insects and vermin; Aberdeen proving grounds and the intensive study; back to Fort Bliss and the 8th ordnance detachment; to Ellington field, Tarrant field, and finally San Antonio. From there on the air has held my interest. Thus two years of travel experience and education, in a form.

"Life as a whole has been a fast moving thing to those of my generation. Two world wars, a depression unequaled in history, a three-term President, men flying in large numbers, the political issues, education. Really a breath taking pace.

"I don't regret the last two years devoted to the service. It is little enough to pay for having enjoyed the 24 years before in a free country."

CHANUTE OPENS A NEW DOOR TO SKILFUL HANDS

may turn up even in places where custom never expected to see them.

Some may be surprised to learn that colored instructors teach at Chanute, instruct some of the most difficult courses. But you see the colored instructors in every shop, surrounded by white and colored students. One colored instructor, Ernest Curtis, native of Springfield, Ill., was himself a student at Chanute. Within a year he was student and teacher.

Other Colored Instructors.

Other colored instructors at Chanute include Earl W. Smith, teletype; Robert Dickson, heat treating; Thomas Hopkins, welding; Wyatt Isabell, electrical division; M. D. Lee, link trainer, and Kenneth Brooks, sheet metal. The army never tells all, but many things one may see for himself.

The 99th Pursuit Squadron, composed of colored flyers, was once stationed at Chanute. Necessity of war sent them to other fields and duties. The squadron no doubt felt regret at leaving the command of Brig. Gen. R. E. O'Neill, commanding officer at Chanute, who had said of all his boys: "I will see you thru in keeping with military necessity, with our war aims, and what is just."

Going and coming is endless here, and tomorrow may bring back the 99th or two or three squadrons. As elsewhere, discipline is doing its work at Chanute. Many of the boys call Chanute an opportunity.

Opens a New Door.

The big name at Chanute, as elsewhere in the technical training command, is that of Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, its commander. He stirs the imagination of youth.

"Yes sir," he said, "I'm reading about Gen. Weaver, my countryman, our high man." He then added: "Gen. Weaver opened a new door to me, he and Uncle Sam, and I'm beating it out for them." That was his story, deeper far in looks than in words.

At Chanute young men with a talent are forgetting little things. "Look," said a colored boy to me, "I'm in the army and college at the same time. This is worth fighting for."

GAD'S HILL MUSIC RECITALS DRAW PROUD PARENTS

Bi-Monthly Events Show Community Interest.

Gad's Hill parents fill their community recreation hall on Sunday afternoon every two months to hear junior and his sisters and brothers play pieces they have practiced so diligently between times. Some play the violin and some sing, but more play the piano. There are solos and duets, but more often one piece is played simultaneously by two young musicians at two pianos.

Gad's Hill center, located at 1919 Cullerton street, serves a community made up largely of Poles and a scattering of Bohemians, Germans, Slovaks, English, Scottish and Mexicans. Music has a large part in the center's program and one of the most popular features is the school of music, sponsored by Mu Phi Epsilon, national music sorority.

Recitals Check Progress.

Group and private lessons are given each Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday. Every two months progress is marked by the Sunday afternoon recitals. Pupils range from kindergarten age to housewives and working fathers. Musically inclined, many already play by ear, but want to learn the notes. For those who don't have pianos at home paper keyboards are supplied so they may learn finger movements and scales.

Music begins early at Gad's Hill. It starts with a rhythm band in nursery school. Many go from this into school bands and later organize their own orchestras for community parties.

Choruses are formed not so much for voice training as for pleasure. One night a week girls from 9 to 14 spend an hour around one of the pianos singing old favorities, particularly folk songs. They also take part in entertainments and sing in Christmas pageants and spring festivals. By popular request a mothers' chorus was organized two years ago and it too takes an active part in the musical programs.

Music Appreciation Lessons.

The Sunday afternoon recitals usually are climaxed with a short lesson in music appreciation for the audience.

At present there are approximately 100 pupils ranging from 5 to 50 years enrolled in the school. One of the latest projects was the organization of a PTA group in the school. One meeting has been held to date and Mrs. Frances Butler, director of the school, praised their enthusiasm.

The three teachers at the school include Mrs. Butler, who teaches violin; Miss Louise St. John Westvelt, vocal, and Miss Marjory Hunter, piano. The music school was organized in 1927 and three years later was taken over by the Chicago chapter of Mu Phi Epsilon.

Rev. C. B. Nordland Takes Pastorate in Forest Park

The Rev. Chauncey B. Nordland today will begin his pastorate at the Forest Park Baptist church, Harlem and Dixon avenues. A resident of Oak Park for eight years, the Rev. Mr. Nordland will continue to make his home at 209 South Harvey avenue, Oak Park, making possible the use of the parsonage near the church as a church house to care for increasing activities of the congregation.

The Rev. C. B. Nordland.

In 1923 the Rev. Mr. Nordland abandoned his career as an engineer to enroll in the theological course of the National Bible institute, New York City. Graduating in 1926 he became pastor of the First Baptist church of Bayonne, N. J.

Took Moody Bible Position.

He served there until becoming director of public relations of the Moody Bible institute, Chicago. For the last two years he has been national director of the Christian Laymen's Crusade.

Widely known for his participation in church affairs, the Rev. Mr. Nordland has been in demand at Bible conferences, youth gatherings, and evangelistic meetings.

Wife Is Singer.

Mrs. Nordland won a scholarship for her singing following her appearance in 1930 in Carnegie hall in New York. The Nordlands have three children—Ida May, 12; Emily, 10, and Elizabeth Ann, 4.

The Forest Park Baptist church was served for 12 years by the Rev. Theodore W. Dons who recently resigned to become the conference evangelist for the General Missionary society of the Baptist Churches of North America.

THREE WEST SIDE STREETS WILL BE PAVED THIS YEAR

City to Spend Half Million in Gas Taxes.

Three paving projects on the west side are included in the city's paving plans for the year, according to William R. Matthews, assistant engineer in charge in the city department of streets and electricity. They are to be paid for from the city's share of the Illinois motor fuel tax and will cost more than half a million dollars.

Widen Madison Street.

One project is for Madison street between Pulaski road and Hamlin avenue, a fourth of a mile, with the pavement to be widened from 48 to 56 feet. The other two, close to the loop, are: Kinzie street, from Milwaukee avenue to Wabash avenue, 0.93 of a mile, with the pavement to be widened from 48 to 56 feet.

Paving of Halsted street from Grand avenue to Harrison street, 10 per cent completed last year, will be continued this year. It is to be widened from 38 to 51 feet for a distance of 1.16 miles.

Cost Above Average.

The city-wide paving program for the year is estimated to cost $3,000,000 compared with the annual average of the last three years of $1,750,000 expended from motor fuel taxes. Most pavements will be of concrete, altho some will be of asphalt.

The only critical materials needed are steel pins for bolstering joints, Matthews said. Priority ratings will be asked for these, but if priority is not given, the pavements will be laid without them. Priority was granted for about 70 per cent of the city's jobs last year, Matthews said.

PLAN FOUR VIADUCTS

Four proposed viaduct improvements at a cost of $2,710,000 are being planned as post-war work on main thorofares on the west side.

The proposed projects and their costs are: Ashland avenue at Kinzie street, $700,000; Western avenue at Kinzie street, $850,000; Western avenue at 26th street, $360,000, and Cermak road at Trumbull avenue, $800,000. Plans are being drawn in the bureau of special improvements of the department of public works.

The present subway at Ashland and Kinzie has two narrow roadways with center column obstructions and forms what engineers called a hazardous bottleneck in an otherwise wide and heavily traveled street. It is proposed to remove obstructions and widen the roadway under the Chicago and North Western; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, and the Pennsylvania rail lines.

Plan After the War Work.

Preliminary engineering surveys and drawing of plans have been approved by the city council and the state has approved engineering expenditures from the city's share of the motor fuel tax. Plans will be taken before the Illinois Commerce commission, with the city seeking apportionment of costs to the railroads. Permanent plans and specifications are scheduled to be ready for beginning of work soon after the war.

At Western avenue and Kinzie street, the present viaduct carries 15 tracks and both St. Paul and North Western railroad yards are nearby. Two narrow roadways and pillar obstructions are the hazard. The city council and state have approved the project and hearings on cost apportionments are in progress before the ICC.

The project at Western avenue and 26th street involves reconstruction of viaduct structures, with only two likely to replace the present three spans. The Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad and the Illinois Northern use the overpasses.

Can Divert Rail Traffic.

Narrow roadways separated by obstructing pillars also will be eliminated here. The job is expected to be less costly because rail traffic can be shunted to one of the three present structures while work progresses under the other two. Otherwise temporary structures would have to be built and removed.

This project also is well along, with hearings in progress before the ICC.

The Cermak and Trumbull improvement will be more costly because these two streets intersect under the viaduct and because both Cermak and Trumbull make sharp turns in order to enter and leave the underpass. These sharp turns would be eliminated in the proposed structure, which would be widened to the full width of Cermak road. Cermak is both a federal and state highway extending from the lake to the city limits and continuing west as Butterfield road. It carries street car tracks thruout its length.

Preliminary surveys and plans have been approved by city council and state.

SKILLED GERMAN ARCHITECT LIKES FREEDOM OF U. S.

Breaks Strait Jacket of Nazi Idealogy.

The Metals and Minerals Research building of the Illinois Institute of Technology at 34th and Federal streets represents something more to Ludwig Mies van der Rohe than another architectural success for him. It symbolizes the freedom to work, to teach, and to build that he has found in America.

Ludwig Mies van der Rohe.

Now in his fifth year as director of the school of architecture at the institute, he came here simply because he no longer could confine his art and his work to the strait jacket of Nazi ideology. He believed it less difficult "to be a stranger in a strange land than a stranger at home."

Compares Two Studios.

No better illustration of the reasons for his coming and his happiness now could be found than in comparison of his Berlin studio and his present office in the Art institute.

The studio in Berlin was located in Karlsbad strasse, not far from the reichs chancellery. The homes and buildings in the neighborhood were all four or five stories high and were built shoulder to shoulder. Most dated from the days of the empire. Some had housed the offices of the kaiser's government, then housed Nazi party organizations.

Opening the door of the apartment building, the visitor met the "Heil Hitler" of the janitress. The much loved "Grüss Gott" or "God bless you" of other days was gone.

The knock at the door of the third story studio was answered by a blond, fair faced, youthful assistant who regarded the guest with suspicion.

"Yes?" he would say.

Open for Americans.

Then, if the visitor were American, the assistant catching the accent, would smile and open the door wide. Inside was the sanctuary of an artist who cherished freedom — outside were the agents of a government which sought control over every act of the individual.

The studio was small, well lighted, and white walled. Here was evidence of the intellect of the man who lived there, books in many languages, modern paintings, which somehow had escaped the firebrand of Hitler youth bent on imposing the Nazi kultur. The photographs were of the great works of Van der Rohe.

Here was an old picture of the German embassy in Petrograd — now Leningrad, Russia. Van der Rohe had supervised its construction in the days of the czars. There was a photograph of the residence museum he had designed for Mrs. Koeller-Mueller of the Hague to house her famous Van Gogh collection. And over there a picture of the German pavilion he planned and executed for the world's fair in Barcelona, Spain, in 1929. And everywhere were photographs of the Bauhaus at Dessau, of which he once was director.

Dessau School Flourished.

The Bauhaus, an architectural school of which he became head in 1930, flourished in Dessau from 1923 until 1932. Then in rented space in an old Berlin factory it carried on until 1933, when, slowly strangled, it died.

The visitor to the studio in late 1937, had he asked for Van der Rohe, would have been answered with, "Why — he's in America."

It was then he came to the United States for the first time. He did not know how long he would stay—until John Holabird, Chicago architect, and H. T. Heald, president of the Illinois Institute of Technology, invited him to become director of the institute's school of architecture. It was then, with promise that he could teach as he wanted, that he decided to make America his home.

In his new studio here, on the ground floor of the Art institute, the real Van der Rohe feels himself again.

Just "Mies" to Pupils.

When he first came to the school students addressed him as Mr. van der Rohe, but that long ago gave way to "Mies." And those who study under him call him that with a familiar and affectionate respect.

One student, recently graduated, a granddaughter of the famed American architect Frank Lloyd Wright, once asked Van der Rohe, "Mies! Why are we allowed so little self-expression?"

He pondered the question in view of his insistence that his students in their four years limit themselves to his four courses—drawing, construction, function, and architectural art. He told her to come for her answer the next day.

"Matter of Self-Expression."

When she arrived for her answer he handed her paper and pencil and told her to write her name. "There," he said, "is a matter of self-expression. First you learned the ABCs. Then you learned to write. The way you write you learned last of all. So is it with architecture. First you learned the fundamentals, then how to build. The way you choose to build comes last. That is self-expression."

Van der Rohe, who lives at 200 East Pearson street, has already taken out his first papers and soon will be an American citizen. At 56, Van der Rohe, who is medium of height, dark, and somewhat stocky in build, has finished plans for the new campus of the Illinois Institute of Technology on the south side.

In his words, "I like America; I like its people; and I particularly like Chicago."

Puts O. K. on Swagger Coat

Miss Beatrice Kramer, 3541 Van Buren street, applies the tape measure to a beige colored swagger coat of wool modeled by Miss Rose Levinson, 1534 South Millard avenue, at a meeting of the consumer division of OCD clothing clinic in Garfield park fieldhouse, 100 North Central Park avenue. They attend the Wednesday afternoon meetings for adults, one of many of the park district's groups in a "new clothes for old" program. A similar class for west side girls from 8 to 14 years old is held at 3 o'clock Friday afternoons in Shedd park fieldhouse.

Many kinds of annuals and vegetables can be sown directly in a cold frame, but to be successful the requirements are [1] fine, moist soil; [2] thin sowing; [3] light covering; [4] careful watering; [5] abundant ventilation as soon as the plants appear above ground, and [6] early picking off to prevent overcrowding and the likelihood of damping off.

Seedlings are delicate to handle, but they quickly respond to good treatment. Do not allow them to stand after germination for any length of time, for they must have sufficient room to develop.

Sow carefully and thinly and much of the difficulty is avoided. It is a waste to sow seed too thickly when all that is necessary is to sow carefully.

A fine seedbed is essential for the soil. Sowing fine seed too deep is often the cause of uneven germination. Heavy seed should be sown deeper than fine seed.

Tuesday, March 23

Seed will not germinate well in dry soil. Water the seedbed with a fine spray. Transplanted plants are more husky and have a much better root system than those taken directly from the seedbed.

Seedlings may be transplanted at least once into flats prior to setting in the field or garden. If it is necessary to buy a few started plants be sure to select the green, sturdy, vigorous stock.

Do the transplanting to the garden at night or during cloudy weather. Water immediately after planting and shade for a day or two. Remove the shade at night.

Wednesday, March 24

Cuttings from plants grown indoors as house plants should continue if more stock for outdoor planting is wanted. Among these are the coleus, one of the most colorful and useful decorative foliage plants among those most usually grown.

Small 2½ inch plants can be purchased and grown until about May 20 when they can be planted out of doors. One of the most desirable golden leaved varieties is golden bedder, and the red leaved sort, verschaffeltii, also is excellent. They also may be grown from seed.

Other kinds include begonia semperflorens, ageratum, verbena beauty of Oxford, and geraniums. Cannas that were placed in sand some time ago should be potted as soon as the divisions have started into growth and they will be in fine condition by planting out time.

The large tubers of the elephant ear may be started indoors. They are tropical in effect and easy to grow. Large tubers may be cut into divisions, but an eye must be left on each piece.

Thursday, March 25

Sweet peas should be sown as soon as the ground can be worked, for they like cool conditions. To sow, make a wide drill about three inches deep and sow at the rate of one pint of seed to 60 feet of drill.

Scatter the seed over the drill to avoid overcrowding; if they are crowded thin them out to give space for each plant. If more than one row is wanted, make the rows four feet apart.

Support with chicken wire or brush. This plant is well adapted to suburban sections because of the better atmospheric conditions and abundant sun. The soil should be well enriched. Mulch during hot weather to conserve the moisture.

Spray the soil around peonies, hollyhocks, and phlox with Bordeaux mixture to reduce fungous attacks. To insure a high germination of delphinium seed, soak the seed in water a few hours until the seed swells, then sow in prepared soil in flats.

Friday, March 26

Do not abandon the perennial borders, but continue to develop the plants to obtain maximum bloom. As soon as the plants show growth divide and replant the fast growing, spreading kinds, such as hardy asters, Oswego tea, Shasta daisies, false dragonhead, sweet William, phlox, and goldenglow.

If the plants have formed dense masses lift them, remove the soil, and replace them with fresh soil or give a good application of decayed manure. If this is unavailable, make an application of commercial plant food and spade it in.

Hardy chrysanthemums should be transplanted each spring. The offsets will be rooted; lift them carefully and plant about 10 inches apart if a mass effect is wanted.

Saturday, March 27

Practically all house plants may be shifted now. Use a soil consisting of one-half garden loam, one-quarter peat or leafmold, and one-quarter sand. Mix well together.

A four inch potful of commercial plant food may be incorporated in the mixture. Screen to remove large lumps. Use small pots or of a size that will be careful not to overpot. If old pots are used, clean them by soaking for 24 hours, then scrub clean.

See that the soil is moistened before using; place plenty of drainage in the bottom of the pots to avoid possible clogging, with subsequent saturated soil.

House plants have renewed activity and will require more water and some food. If a new supply of plants is needed, it is interesting to buy small pot plants and grow them on during the summer.

CHECK UP HOME NOW FOR NEEDED SPRING REPAIRS

Minor Weak Spots May Grow Like Weeds.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

In any pre-spring checkup of the interior of your house, most homes will reveal certain small weak spots that are minor enough in themselves, but which can grow like weeds and even drive the most poised of hostesses into apology complexes.

By this time the entrance hall may be showing signs of winter's wear and ravages, and if there are scuffed places on the floor around the threshhold it may not be necessary to revarnish the entire floor.

Clean, Sand and Varnish.

One can try a varnish patchup job first—that is if the varnish is not worn thru, but only scuffed and soiled. First, all surface soil should be removed with a damp cloth wrung out from mild soap suds and dried immediately. After this one can use a fine sandpaper and then apply a fresh coat of varnish. To prevent a "patched" look the varnish should be well brushed out at the edges.

If there are scratches in the varnish they can be removed by running turpentine into them and then rubbing them lightly. In case the wear has gone thru to the bare wood the same process can be followed, except that two or more coats of varnish probably will be needed for the refinishing work. If the varnish is in a definitely bad tate all over, it is best to remove what is left of the old finish and refinish from the bare wood floor.

By spring many a house is crying out for more storage space, closets, and shelves.

Enlarge Shallow Closets.

It may be that with a comparatively small investment in materials you can have all the closet space you need. Partitions can be removed from shallow closets, and double doors set a foot farther in the room. Then a full length mirror inside one door and plenty of rods and racks, and you have increased the general utility and size of the original closet.

Shelves are another clever space saver. In the living room there may be space between a fireplace and a jog in the wall where some extra small shelves can be tucked. Or the window sills may be very narrow and you can widen them with less effort than you think, so you've room for more potted greenery and blooming plants, or more space for books and magazines.

It may be possible to install a built-in window seat in the dining room or bedroom, a seat that won't take up much more room than the window sill and yet will be a haven for hard-to-place belongings. And in bedrooms there can hardly be too many shelves if space must be garnered for children's toys, for books, and flowers, for toilet accessories over a chest of drawers, or for pads and ink over a too crowded little work table, or desk.

Shelves for Bedrooms.

If a bedroom or a sleeping porch is very small a shelf can run parallel to the bed for a magazine rack and a lamp, and eliminate the need for a table, for which there just isn't the space. Some home owners who have a shelf running across the heads of their twin beds declare they wouldn't be without it for the comfort it gives in parking space for books and candy and like accessories.

There will be more and more staying home in spare time for most home owners and detailed inspection by the owners will reveal needed repairs and small improvements, by way of stopping threatened deterioration, and adding extra spaces in the rooms we already have.

Stanley Johnston Talks on Sportsmen Spotlight.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent and author of "Queen of the Flat Tops," will be a guest of Bob Becker on his program over W-G-N at 3 p. m. today. Johnston will tell about dogs that go to sea and dogs he has seen in battle. Becker will also give a report on the army's sentry dog training program at Fort Robinson, Nebraska.

W-G-N's new chief of production, Lewis James, has been in radio as a tenor since 1921. He's one of the real old timers. For a decade from 1926 to 1936 he was featured with the Revelers, probably the best known of all radio quartets.

What was formerly the Ben Bernie show on CBS, because of the illness of the Old Maestro, is now "Keep the Home Fires Burning," a program of relaxing music, addressed mainly to workers in war plants. Jack Fulton Jr., formerly tenor soloist on the show, has gone east and is singing with Bob Crosby's orchestra.

Something new at W-G-N is the feminine sound effects technician. First of her sex to undertake this rôle at the station is Genevieve Capstaff. W-G-N is feeling the man power pinch. Approximately 50 per cent of the station's male personnel, as of Dec. 7, 1941, has enlisted for service in the army, navy, or answered the call for other war duties.

The National Association of Broadcasters will hold a conference at the Palmer House from April 27 to 29 to consider the rôle of domestic radio stations with regard to the war effort. Government officials will be on hand to let the broadcasters hear their viewpoints.

OFFER 'BITTERSWEET' NEXT SATURDAY ON W-G-N AIR THEATER

Noel Coward's "Bittersweet" will be presented on the Chicago Theater of the Air from 8 to 9 p. m. next Saturday over W-G-N and Mutual Marion Claire will be starred.

Miss Claire will be supported by of Sari Linden. The rôle is a familiar one to Miss Claire. She appeared in the stage presentation of the operetta and has sung the rôle before on Theater of the Air productions.

Miss Claire will be supported by an augmented chorus, a cast of well known radio actors to play the speaking rôles, and the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber. Robert Trendler will direct the chorus.

All the familiar Coward songs, "I'll See You Again," "Tokay," "Zigeuner," "Call of Life," and "Small Café," will be presented.

Brings Greetings

Mark Love brings greetings from Chicagoland boys in training camps thruout the country at 10 o'clock Sunday mornings at 10 o'clock over W-G-N.

GOLDEN GLOVES INTER-CITY BOUTS SLATED ON W-G-N

The Inter-City Golden Gloves bouts between the Chicago Champions and the New York winners will be broadcast in part over W-G-N starting at 10:30 p. m., Wednesday, March 31. Jack Brickhouse, who reported the Chicago Tournament of Champions, will be at the microphone.

Kirsten and Spalding to Be Kostelanetz Guests

Dorothy Kirsten and Albert Spalding will be guests on Andre Kostelanetz' program at 3:30 p. m. today over WBBM-CBS. Miss Kirsten will sing "Isn't It Romantic" and "One Kiss." Mr. Spalding, violinist, will play Rachmaninoff's "Albumblatt" and Pierne's "Serenade." The orchestra will play "Marche Slave."

HUTCHINS TO BE SPEAKER TODAY ON ROUND TABLE

President Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago will appear on the U. of C. Round Table at 1 o'clock this afternoon over WMAQ-NBC. The topic, "Education for Freedom," was selected in coöperation with the American Association of School Administrators now holding its annual convention "by air" because of the war. The Round Table will discuss the rôle of liberal education in war time, the training programs o fthe services, including those to be established in colleges, and the plight of small liberal arts colleges. Other speakers will be Lt. Comm. Alvin McKean and Ralph Tyler.

Post-War Topic.

The subject, "Can Free Enterprise Carry the Post-War Load?" will be discussed on Wake Up, America at 2:15 p. m. today over WENR-Blue. The speakers will be Lewis H. Haney, William Haynes, and George Soule.

Extra Report for Close.

An additional weekly news broadcast has been scheduled for Upton Close. He will be heard every Saturday at 7:30 p. m. on W-G-N and the Mutual network. This program will be presented along with Close's other Mutual commentary on Sundays at 5:30 p. m. [CWT].

CHANUTE OPENS A NEW DOOR TO SKILLFUL HANDS

It's Loved by 'Chillun with Wings.'

BY ROSCOE SIMMONS.

Chanute, Ill., March 20.—Chanute field, one of the most famous of American air training bases, is more campus than camp. It is school and college, a university of specialization. It is heart of the army air forces technical command, altho headquarters of the command is in Knollwood, N. C.

Situated almost mid-Illinois, the sweep of its acres, the architecture of countless buildings, the earnest demeanor of its student soldiers, all speak the spirit of this laboratory of flight.

Here assemble American youth, without distinction as to race or color, to study side by side how to keep fighting ships in the air. Without Chanute and its dozen sister schools, the epic story of American air fighters could not be told.

Trainees Picked for Aptitude.

Trainees reach Chanute not by their own choice, but because they were picked from their units for aptness; as fit to go on with higher technical knowledge required to "keep 'em flying." Here those who study flying almost never fly.

Chanute is representative of the integration of every creed and color and race into the unanimity of war. It is so with the student body and so with its "faculty."

Glamour of the military camp—drill, marching, music—is missing here. Nor are the skies over Chanute filled with ships. But as a technical command Chanute cannot possibly be second to any similar center in a world of war.

Send Ships Up Right.

The stirring motto of the army air forces training—SUSTINEO ALAS—was repeated to a colored [soldier] student. "I know," he said, "but I was never much on Latin, but I'll do my best to send the ships up right, and if they're downed I'll send 'em right back up all right again."

Subjects taught include parachute rigging, link trainer [where those who teach flying themselves may not know how to fly], teletype machinery, sheet metal, welding, heat treating, electrical devices, instruments of the earth and the heavens, special purpose vehicles, and the weather.

"God's Chilluns Got Wings."

One of the many colored boys, shaping an after-the-war career for machinery, was reminded of the English version of the command's motto—"I Sustain the Wings." "Well," he said, "since all God's chilluns got wings, I ought to be good working with 'em."

Every day is Commencement day at Chanute and the graduates are dispatched to ground centers stretching across the land. Each student studies to become expert on one thing; seeks to master one part of an airship. Marks here are not made on ancestry but on industry, attention, aptitude. When the graduates move out, they may turn up even in places where custom never expected to see them.

Some may be surprised to learn that colored instructors teach at Chanute, instruct some of the most difficult courses. But you see the colored instructors in every shop, surrounded by white and colored students. One colored instructor, Ernest Curtis, native of Springfield, Ill., was himself a student at Chanute. Within a year he was student and teacher.

Other Colored Instructors.

Other colored instructors at Chanute include Earl W. Smith, teletype; Robert Dickson, heat treating; Thomas Hopkins, welding; Wyatt Isabell, electrical division; M. D. Lee, link trainer, and Kenneth Brooks, sheet metal. The army never tells all, but many things one may see for himself.

The 99th Pursuit Squadron, composed of colored flyers, was once stationed at Chanute. Necessity of war sent them to other fields and duties. The squadron no doubt felt regret at leaving the command of Brig. Gen. R. E. O'Neill, commanding officer at Chanute, who had said of all his boys: "I will see you thru in keeping with military necessity, with our war aims, and what is just."

Going and coming is endless here, and tomorrow may bring back the 99th or two or three squadrons. As elsewhere, discipline is doing its work at Chanute. Many of the boys call Chanute an opportunity.

Opens a New Door.

The big name at Chanute, as elsewhere in the technical training command, is that of Maj. Gen. Walter R. Weaver, its commander. He stirs the imagination of youth.

"Yes sir," he said, "I'm reading about Gen. Weaver, my countryman, our high man." He then added: "Gen. Weaver opened a new door to me, he and Uncle Sam, and I'm beating it out for them." That was his story, deeper far in looks than in words.

With AMERICA'S FIGHTERS

Capt. Edward J. Geldermann, son of Mrs. E. J. Geldermann, 7359 North Seeley avenue, last week was designated adjutant of the San Antonio quartermaster depot. Capt. Geldermann was previously plans and training officer and director of unit training. Graduated from West Point in 1941 as a 2d lieutenant, he was promoted to 1st lieutenant in June, 1942, and to captain on Jan. 2, 1943.

Capt. Geldermann.

Gaylord L. Wahl, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Wahl of Northbrook, was graduated Feb. 26 from the marine aviation detachment of the naval air technical training center at Navy pier. He was promoted to private first class.

Gaylord Wahl.

Two Chicago nurses—2d Lt. Frances E. Doran and 2d Lt. Julia E. Engel, both of 4907 North Wolcott street—have been assigned to the station hospital at Camp Grant.

In graduation exercises held at Roswell army flying school recently, Joseph H. Epstein, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Epstein, 1422 Thorndale avenue, received his 2d lieutenant's commission and the wings of a bombardier. Before he joined the army in November, 1941, Epstein attended Senn High school.

Lt. Epstein.

Two north side women are among the 62 enrollees of the WAAC training center of Daytona Beach, Fla., selected to attend officer training school in Fort Des Moines. They are Marjorie E. Kruse, 4521 Malden street, and Mary L. Randall, 257 East Delaware place.

They're ensigns in the naval reserve now—these three north side girls! Graduates of the WAVE officer training school at Smith college, Mass., Dorothea A. Bergin of Evanston, Anne M. Dorsey of Evanston, and Helen L. Sunderman, 1468 Berwyn avenue, were assigned to active duty on March 9 in their new officer rôles.

Ensign Bergin.

Pvt. Albert C. Leinen, 1719 Fremont street, who recently graduated from the parachute training school in Camp Lejeune, North Carolina, has been transferred to Camp Elliott, California, for fleet marine force duty.

Corpus Christi bound are five north side naval aviation cadets who have just completed their primary training at the Glenview naval air station. They are Fortune J. Doux, 914 Lakeside avenue; Robert L. Morrison of Lincolnwood; David E. Johnson Jr. of Highland Park; William A. McCormick Jr., 502 Aldine avenue, and Robert C. S. Anderson, 3300 Lakewood avenue. After completing the advanced flight training course at the Texas air station, the cadets will be commissioned ensigns in the navy air corps.

Commissioned 2d lieutenants after completing officer training in the infantry school at Fort Benning, Georgia, recently were Arthur Loseff, 1426 Bichwood avenue; Walter C. Kreider, 1302 Carmen avenue; Irving H. Goodsteen, 6412 Glenwood avenue; William C. Buck, 5756 Kenmore avenue, and Albert I. Rosenquist, 1151 Waveland avenue.

Three north siders were commissioned 2d lieutenants in the cavalry at Fort Riley, Kansas, last week. They are Sheldon E. Erickson, 1459 Victoria street; Frank L. Larson, 1823 Cornelia avenue, and Henry F. Saal, 2007 Birchwood avenue.

New arrivals at Scott field, Illinois, include Raymond A. Johnson, 4554 North Maplewood avenue; Edwin B. Warner, 1726 Belmont avenue; Edmund J. Gabriel, 35 North Ogden avenue; Daniel G. Olson, 4338 North Damen avenue; Robert D. Berg, 7100 Sheridan road; Robert F. Blake, 6905 North Western avenue; Donald W. Paulick, 4438 North Damen avenue; Wolfram G. Futterer, 714 Fullerton parkway, and W. F. Hachmeister, 2706 Mildred avenue.

Exactly one year after he was sworn into the navy as a yeoman, George McGurn, 7024 Ridge avenue, was commissioned an ensign in the naval reserve. He will leave shortly for Dartmouth college, N. H., where he will take an intensive two months indoctrination course.

Lake Forest college is proud of two of its recent graduates. Ken Goelzer, class of 1941, has been graduated as an ensign from the navy midshipman school at Columbia university at the head of a class of 1,270 men. Ian "Blacky" Falconer, class of 1940, has completed an officer candidate school at Fort Davis, ranking second in a class of 400 men, and has received his commission as a 2d lieutenant. Both young men will go on to specialist schools.

When Walter G. Kelly, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Kelly of Evanston, comes home on leave shortly, he will be wearing the gold wings of a navy aviator and the single gold stripe of an ensign. Kelly completed his flight training last month at Jacksonville, Fla. He was graduated from Loyola academy in 1939 and attended Notre Dame university until he enlisted in the air corps. In 1937 Ensign Kelly was champion swimmer in the Chicago Catholic high school contest.

Ensign Kelly.

Miss Esther Ruth Doege, 20, a new recruit in the WAVES, is waiting for her navy orders. She is the daughter of John Doege, 635 Oakdale avenue. A graduate of Waller High school, Miss Doege is employed at the Chicago Athletic association.

Esther Doege.

News has just reached Mrs. Gustav H. Kiland, 6250 North Winthrop avenue, that her son, Capt. Ingolf H. Kiland, has been awarded the navy cross. It was presented to him by Adm. William F. Halsey in recognition of his leadership in an engagement in which his task force beat off a Japanese night torpedo plane attack south of Guadalcanal without damage to the allied convoy.

Naval Aviation Cadet Robert J. Marguerite, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Marguerite of Evanston, has completed the three month course at the navy pre-flight school in Chapel Hill, N. C., and has been promoted to primary flight training at Glenview. Cadet Marguerite is a graduate of Sullivan High school and Loyola university.

Robert Marguerite.

Joseph W. Rippinger, brother of Mrs. John Leward, 321 Evergreen avenue, has been called to active duty by the army air corps. He will receive his pre-flight training at Sheppard field, Texas. Rippinger was a student at Miami university, Oxford, O.

His third promotion in two months was received by Joseph Tamok, 1435 Astor street, last week when he was moved up to staff sergeant at Will Rogers field, Oklahoma. Sergt. Tamok is a supply sergeant with a service group in training at the field.

Promotions have been awarded to the following north side army men: Andrew F. Fograse, 686 Irving Park boulevard, staff sergeant; Jerome J. Falzer, 1424 Hollywood avenue, corporal; Homer G. Blout, 826 South Wabash avenue, first sergeant; Christen J. Pedersen, 2342 Touhy avenue, staff sergeant; John J. Ducharme, 5722 Winthrop avenue, staff sergeant; Daniel R. Friedman, 437 Belmont avenue, technician 5th grade; Graham Young, 56 East Oak street, corporal; William A. Reardon, 55 West Erie street, staff sergeant; Robert W. Nichols of Highland Park, corporal; John A. Hurley, 1055 Granville avenue, technician 5th grade; Wilbur R. Schwarz, 1747 Wallen avenue, sergeant; Albert N. Poglitsch, 1350 Belmont avenue, staff sergeant; Joseph J. Nuccie, 1128 Addison street, corporal; Leon W. Martin, 5607 North Clark street, corporal; Alfred Aloisi, 58 West Goethe street, sergeant; Earl S. Ruby, 1018 Berwyn avenue, staff sergeant; Vincent M. Decker, 706 North Dearborn street, corporal, and Arthur J. Pregenzer, 3208 North Sheffield avenue, staff sergeant.

Two north side men won commendation from their commanding officer at the San Angelo army air field bombardier school, Texas, recently for "outstanding performance" in their jobs as aircraft mechanics. The men honored were Frank J. Kandlik, 2902 Fullerton avenue, and Wilbur H. Sass, 1039 Newport avenue.

North side WAACs, Gwenllean L. Maguire, 1446 Pensacola avenue; Roberta H. Childs, 943 Foster avenue, and Dadie S. Spiegel, 4807 Winthrop avenue, have completed their basic training at Fort Des Moines, Iowa, and are reporting to specialist schools.

Four north siders have arrived at Camp Wolters, Texas, to begin basic training as infantrymen. They are Walter R. Gregin, 3749 North Hermitage avenue; Clarence R. Rudolph, 1110 Fullerton avenue; Richard J. Delort, 1354 George street, and Adolph N. Sunden, 3783 North Greenview avenue.

Louis Ofstein, 5200 Sheridan road, has left the air base at Altus, Okla., to attend a 72 day photography course at Lowry field, Denver, Colo. He was chosen in a competitive examination.

A north side aviation cadet at Goodfellow field, Texas, was named class adjutant last week. He is Andrew A. Misthos, a graduate of Waller High school, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Misthos, 172 East Superior street. In school he was an R. O. T. C. cadet.

For the following four weeks, these women will be assigned to a basic company for more detailed military training. In this group are: Catherine E. Dooley of 6615 Greenview avenue; Betty J. Echols of 1216 Hollywood avenue; Claire K. Nevker of 1338 Diversey parkway; Jean E. Brooks of 666 Wrightwood avenue; Mary R. Grego of 2719 Southport avenue, and Vivian M. VICTORY PLAYERS GIVE FIRST SALON PROGRAM TODAY

In its new Thumb-Nail theater at 879 North State street, the Victory Players, formerly the La Salle Victory Players, will present the first of its salon programs at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Guests will be seated at tables in the theater, and refreshments will be served during the two one act plays, "Duet in a Flat," written by Charles A. Hunt, 50 East Chicago avenue, a member of the Players, and "Swamp-Spirit," directed by Gerald Barbier, 1528 North Dearborn parkway.

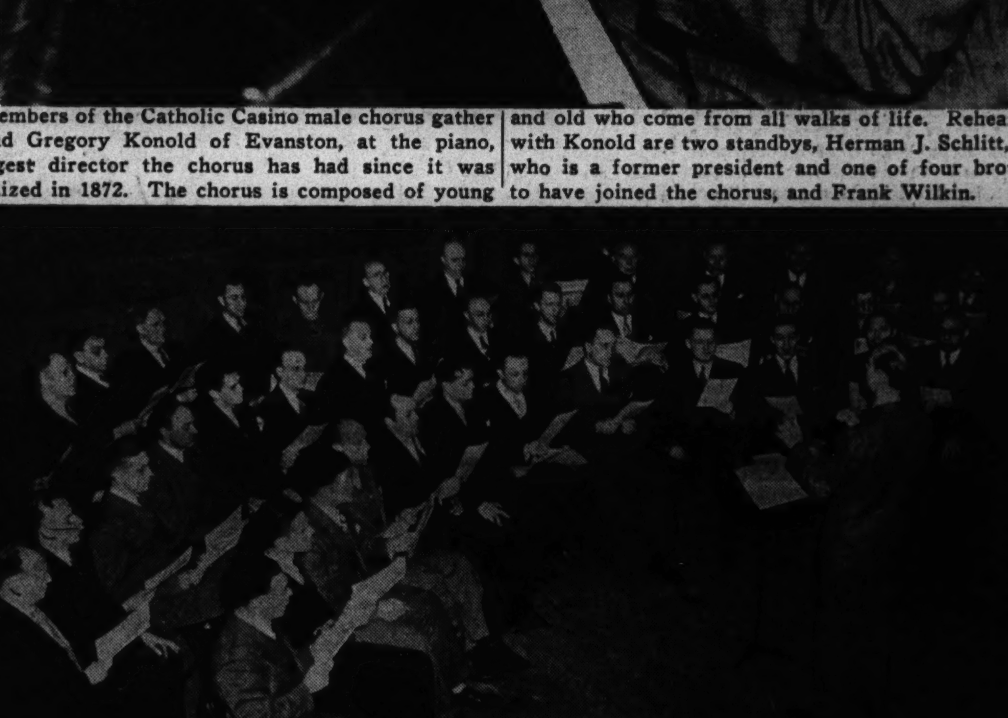
North siders who will appear in the plays are Lucille Kades, Beatrice Cholden, Meta Meyer, Pat Conrad, Frances Klonowsky, Grace Garcia, Meredith Johnson, James Krulish, Ruth Shaheen, and Barney Tucker. The little theater group was organized last fall by William and Lauri Nelson, 5820 North Kenmore avenue.

Deerfield Pastor Aids Drive by Presbyterians

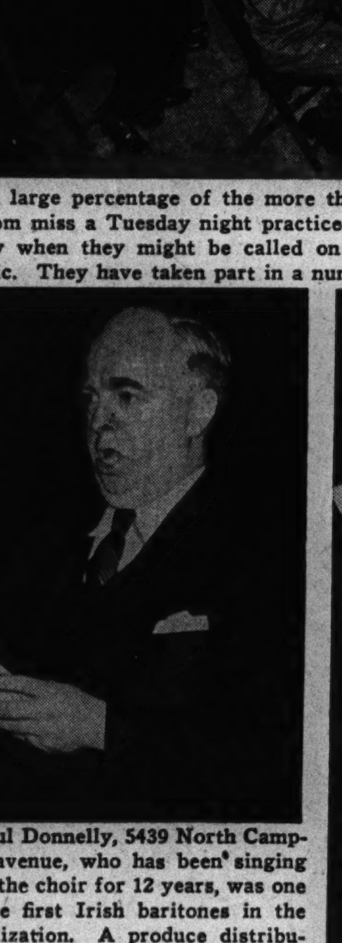
One of the leaders in the recent one day drive by Chicago and suburban Presbyterians to raise $1,500,000 for city, religious, and social institutions was the Rev. Bernard Vanderbeek, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Deerfield. Funds for the drive also will be used for war purposes.

Casino Male Choristers Sing for Fun

Members of the Catholic Casino male chorus gather around Gregory Konold of Evanston, at the piano, youngest director the chorus has had since it was organized in 1872. The chorus is composed of young and old who come from all walks of life. Rehearsing with Konold are two standbys, Herman J. Schlitt, left, who is a former president and one of four brothers to have joined the chorus, and Frank Wilkin.



A large percentage of the more than 60 members seldom miss a Tuesday night practice for they never know when they might be called on to perform in public. They have taken part in a number of W-G-N Christmas programs and sing on the Chicagoland Church hour over W-G-N. Then, too, the practices are fun and nearly all the choristers would forgo almost anything else for a Tuesday night of singing.



Paul Donnelly, 5439 North Campbell avenue, who has been singing with the choir for 12 years, was one of the first Irish baritones in the organization. A produce distributor by trade, he never misses a Tuesday night gathering because he "loves to sing."

K. of C. Club Holds Party Honoring T. J. Murtaugh

In recognition of his work as state chairman of the Knights of Columbus war bonds and stamps committee, Timothy J. Murtaugh of 1910 Estes avenue, retired grand knight, was honored last night at a St. Patrick's dinner dance sponsored by the Fourth Degree club of University council, held in the Sovereign hotel. James J. Dolan, president of the group, was chairman of the party. Working with him were Robert L. Sullivan, Edward J. Dillon, and James J. Malone.

Police of North Side Eat Corned Beef at Church

The Chicago police of the north and near north sides, decked out in their brightest green neckties, ate corned beef on St. Patrick's day in the auditorium of St. Hilary's Catholic church, 5645 North California avenue. The Rev. T. J. Burke, pastor, was chairman of the dinner and the card party which followed.

Chase Park Youth to Give Exhibit of Physical Fitness

More than 200 boys and girls of the Uptown and Ravenswood communities will participate in Chase park's annual physical fitness demonstration at 8 o'clock Friday in the park gymnasium, 4701 North Ashland avenue. The program will include calisthenics drills, organized games, marching drills, tap dancing, folk dancing, apparatus work, weight normalizing groups, and a barn dance demonstration. Each group will demonstrate some aspect of physical fitness taught at the park throut the indoor season.

Offer Courses Leading to Telegraph Office Jobs

In coöperation with a telegraph company, Washburne Trade school, 1225 Sedgwick street, is offering for the second time a course of instruction to qualify students for positions in telegraph offices. Training includes teletype operation, traffic operation, communication laws and regulations, international communications, rating, checking, and telegraph and cable routine. There is no tuition, and books are furnished without charge. The employment record of the first graduating class is 100 per cent.

SEEK TO ENROLL EVERY FAMILY ON NORTH SIDE

Plan 215 Community Plots This Season.

With the advent of spring block garden wardens of division 6 will embark on a campaign to organize community garden clubs in all areas bordering on Lake Michigan, Lee Ross, division director, announced.

As each community garden club is formed, OCD officials will find adequate space for the group in the many acres of good soil along the river channel in the west portion of the division.

"Because the top layer of good soil along the lake is too thin for raising vegetables satisfactorily," Ross stated, "division 6 faces a special problem. Some gardeners in these areas must be discouraged from planting in their own back yards. We believe that our community garden clubs in which members will work coöperatively is the best solution."

List Sandy Soil Areas.

The communities whose soil is almost uniformly sandy are Clark-Diversey, Uptown, East Lake View, Sheridan center, Edgewater, Devon-Sheridan, the near north side, and the eastermost parts of the Rogers Park area.

"And many of the sections in our division are too closely built up to provide ample gardening space," Ross also pointed out.

Despite these handicaps, division 6, like all other OCD divisions in the city, is seeking to enlist every family in the war garden program. If a resident is in doubt about the soil in his back yard, he is advised to consult his block garden warden. If there is still doubt, professional advice will be given him.

Plan Youth Rally in April.

A rally of all north side young people will be held in April in Lane Technical High school under the auspices of the American Youth Reserves, junior OCD organization, to stimulate youthful participation

Last year 90 community gardens were cultivated on the north side. It is estimated that with the community garden club plan the number will be boosted to 215 gardens this season.

As soon as the frost is out of the ground, probably early in April, the park district will begin plowing the fields set aside for the project. Plowing will continue thru May.

Lots plowed last fall in preparation for the planting season this spring were the southwest corner of Clark street and Pensacola avenue, the southwest corner of Western and Berwyn avenues, the northeast corner of Western Berwyn avenues, 6017-19 North Richmond street, and the north side of Estes avenue between Rockwell and Washtenaw avenues.

Some May Try Two Crops.

For enterprising gardeners who want to get a jump on the weather and harvest two crops, the park district has issued a list of vegetables which can be planted now in seed flats indoors and transplanted when the weather is mild. Full directions accompany the list. Aside from tomatoes and beans which should be started indoors within the next few weeks, the vegetables which may be planted in seed flats include broccoli, brussels sprouts, cabbage, celery, collards, egg plant, kohlrabi, head lettuce, onions, parsley, peppers, spinach, and swisschard.

In its victory garden kit, which may be obtained thru any branch of the Chicago Public library, the park district also gives a complete table for estimating the amount of seed needed, a garden plan, a planting calendar for vegetables, and directions for getting sanitary district sludge for improving the soil.

19 Community Chairmen.

C. E. Hewitt of the Lincoln park conservatory is general garden chairman for division 6. His co-chairman is Mrs. Herman C. Lammers, 5222 Lakewood avenue. Working directly with the co-chairmen and with the block garden wardens are the 19 community garden chairmen. They are:

Community 1—Near North Side: Earnest W. Turner.

RUNOFF MUDDLE BOILS 47TH WARD ALDERMANIC POT

Crossed Party Lines Cloud North Side Issues.

BY HAROLD SMITH.

North side aldermanic politics, quiet since the Feb. 23 election, revived considerably last week as both sides began whooping it up for the April 6 runoffs. Supplemental elections are being held in nine Chicago wards where no candidate got a clear majority last month. Of these, the 43d, 45th and 47th are on the north side.

Great shows of enthusiasm made in both major party camps rang truest among the Republicans. Growing signs of defeatism are plentiful on the Democratic side, while the G. O. P. workers are keyed up by a rising tide of reaction against the national administration's schemes.

Center of Hot Fight.

More than the usual interest centered in the 47th ward, scene of one of the hottest fights in the city, where party politics is so scrambled even the informed have no easy time keeping things straight.

For in the 47th, whose residents, mostly long established middle class home owners, take their aldermanic politics seriously, the Republicans have espoused the cause of an erstwhile Democrat while the city hall machine is behind a lifelong Republican.

In 47th Ward Race

The man the Democrats pulled thru to the runoff is Frank J. Nenning, part owner of a downtown print shop, who for 18 years was secretary of the G. O. P. ward organization of William H. Wesbey, former superintendent of Lincoln park and a lieutenant of Len Small and Fred Lundin.

Republicans Back Incumbent.

The Republicans are backing Ald. Frank O. Hilburn, who owes his election four years ago principally to the aid of the Democratic ward organization of Municipal Judge Erwin J. Hasten. A tthe behest of the ward committeeman, Frank R. Leonard, the G. O. P. organization swung in behind Ald. Hilburn after their own candidate, Franklin C. E. Lundquist, was eliminated from the runoff last month.

Nenning's chief help is coming from the Democratic group jointly controled by Ward Committeeman Joseph H. Donahue, county superintendent of public service, and Municipal Judge Frank E. Donoghue. This group for the present has superseded the Hasten organization, Donahue having won his way back to the city hallers' good graces after backing his brother-in-law, Ald. Albert F. Schulz, a Courtneyite, for reëlection four years ago.

Bitterness Still Alive.

The bitterness engendered by that battle is still alive. It was heightened in the ward committeemanship elections of 1940, in which Ald. Hilburn and his followers sponsored the candidacy of Edward P. Burke. In the Burke camp also was James T. O'Malley, a candidate for alderman the year previous. The campaign for committeeman was fierce, but Donahue won by a big margin. Burke and O'Malley are among Democratic independents now in the Hilburn corner.

Ald. Hilburn wasn't always on the Democratic side, for in 1938 he was a supporter of Green for governor against Richard J. Lyons in the Republican primary. By his acceptance of the regular Republican ward indorsement he joined the McKibbin-for-mayor forces, but his friends say he will not attack Mayor Kelly's administration.

House to House Poll.

Both candidates are appearing almost nightly at ward meetings, and their organizations are preparing for complete canvasses of all householders in the last 10 days of the runoff campaign. Nenning promises a continuation of the ward improvements that have been carried thru under Democratic leadership.

Ald. Hilburn is running on his record, which he says includes the securing of street paving, additional playgrounds and other improvements for his neighborhood.

LINCOLN SQUARE OCD GROUP CALLS GARDEN MEETING

Horticulturists to Talk, Advise on Seeds.

A call has gone out to all prospective war gardeners to be on hand for a Lincoln Square community OCD meeting at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon in Welles park. Charles Hewitt, horticulturist of Lincoln park conservatory and war garden co-chairman for division 6, will give a talk, illustrated with slides, on "Seeds." Arthur Jackson, junior horticulturist at Lincoln park, also will offer advice and answer questions. The meeting will be conducted by Mrs. J. P. Sterling, war garden chairman of the community, and Harry J. Kohl, assistant community commander.

The office of civilian defense for the Chicago Metropolitan area announces the appointment of Paul J. King of Waukegan as director of OCD division 8, which extends along the lake shore from Northbrook to the Illinois-Wisconsin state line. He succeeds Henry Bleck.

King is no newcomer to civilian defense. As coördinator of the Lake county council of defense, he directed one of the first blackouts in the midwest area—on Jan. 16, 1942, less than six weeks after Pearl Harbor. He also is Lake county director of the Illinois state council of defense.

In the first World war, King served overseas, was wounded three times, and was decorated with the Order of the Purple Heart with oak leaf cluster.

The first V-zone in the Chicago OCD area, the central-uptown community, was honored recently, and its block captains presented with V-block awards. The zone captain is William Emrich, who has held the post for more than a year. The block captains honored are Orange Apple, Armin J. Lande, Chester L. MacDonald, H. O. Hoowsbeen, Herbert Samuels, and William Schachtel. A V-zone is one that conforms to all OCD standards of protective service and community coöperation.

In response to a letter written recently by Block Capt. Thomas H. McGovern, Clark-Devon district, to his block residents, 25 pies, 20 cakes, dozens of doughnuts, one-half barrel of apples, four gallons of tomato juice, pickles, olives, cigarets, candy, and books flooded the Howard Street Service Men's center. Since then the block [block 10, zone 7] has been surveying the needs of the center and filling them regularly.

For youngsters not old enough to be official OCD messengers the Clark-Devon community has devised a new post and an arm band marking them auxiliary workers. This plan was decided upon after two 11 year old boys—Allen Apple and Richard Knapp—began running errands for the community office and soon made themselves indispensable. Any child who has given 25 hours service either to the community office or to his block office is entitled to wear the arm band.

MARSHALL IS HOST THURSDAY TO HIGH SCHOOL PTA SESSION

The high school councils of PTA districts 23 and 24 will hold an all-day conference at Marshall High school, 3250 Adams street, beginning at 9:45 o'clock Thursday morning. Mrs. Louis Brookman Jr., 1541 Norwood street, will lead a discussion during the afternoon program.

Mrs. Louis Brookman Jr.

The meeting will be conducted by Mrs. Albert S. Wolff, council president. T. J. Lubera, principal of Marshall, will speak, and the school glee club will sing. During the morning session, there will be reports of council chairmen and presidents. In the afternoon, there will be election of officers and their installation.

Waukegan Teachers to Get $100 Bonus with June Pay

Wallace A. Green, president of the Waukegan board of education, has announced that a $100 bonus will be paid to each of the 150 Waukegan teachers and school employés with their June pay checks. The extra money, designed to meet the rising cost of living, is available because 1942 tax collections were higher than expected, Green said.

Red Cross Unit Meets Weekly in Chapin Hall

Chapin hall Red Cross unit meets from 9 until 4 o'clock every Wednesday at the Chicago Nursery and Half Orphan asylum, 2801 Foster avenue. The group is an open unit which sews and makes surgical dressings. Mrs. Jules E. Erbeau is chairman.

NEAR NORTH SIDE PAVING PROJECTS PLANNED BY CITY

Three sections of street on the outskirts of the loop are among paving projects to be newly started this year and two others, started last year, will be continued, according to William R. Matthews, assistant engineer in charge in the city department of streets and electricity. L. M. Johnson is commissioner.

The work is included in a paving program that has been expanded this year despite the war. Priority ratings will be asked for steel pins to reinforce joints, Matthews said, but where they are not available, the pavements will be laid without them. Last year steel priorities were obtained for about 70 per cent of the paving jobs.

Rebuild Old Streets.

The surfaces will be of concrete chiefly, but some will be of asphalt, Matthews said. All the pavements will be widened to allow for four lanes of traffic and two parking lanes to conform with a city plan which is designed to gradually make old streets conform to modern needs, Matthews said.

To be started this year are the following jobs, with length, planned width and present width indicated, the latter in parentheses:

Jobs Under Construction.

Started last year and to be finished this year are pavements on North Clark street, from Diversey parkway to Addison street, 1.15 miles, to be widened from 42 to 51 feet, with 16 feet allowed for street car tracks, and Division street, from Clybourne avenue to Elston avenue, 1 mile, to be widened from 38 to 51 feet, with 16 feet for street car tracks. The Clark street job was reported 5 per cent done last year and the Division street job, 20 per cent.

DE PAUL CLASS TO STUDY, OFFER AID TO BUSINESS

As a help toward solving the serious shortage in office workers caused by the war, the secretarial school of De Paul university, 64 East Lake street, will inaugurate a unique plan in business education beginning tomorrow with the new quarter. Under the plan which was announced recently by Loretto R. Hoyt, director, students will go to school half a day, and for the other half will be sent out in emergency office help squads to work in nearby loop firms. The system will get under way as a new class enters.

De Paul students will be placed in business firms in squads of 10 or 20 to a firm, 5 of them working during the morning hours and 5 during the afternoon. Each group of girls will work 20 hours a week and go to school 20 hours, Miss Hoyt explained. Students in the present class will be capable of doing junior stenographic work, while new students, until they have completed some of their work in secretarial school, will be able to take jobs as file clerks, record clerks, telephone order girls, and clerical workers.

North Shore Juniors.

Miss Marion Gridley of the hospital staff has helped plan the tour as part of the 9th district federation welfare program. 'STAMP APPEAL' KEY QUALITY IN MINUTE MAIDS

18 N. U. War Aids Do Work Quickly, Disappear.

It's the "right approach" that counts in selling war stamps, say Northwestern university's 18 smiling "Minute Maids," whose appearances around campus are frequent but brief. They visit every dance, party, banquet, lecture, and other university function, scatter quickly thru the gathering, dispense their stamps quietly and disappear suddenly, without having disrupted any of the goings-on.

Organized recently, the unit of "Minute Maids" at Northwestern, under the direction of the United States treasury department, has been headed by Virginia Lake, a junior in the school of sociology. Miss Lake, who worked under the originator of the "Minute Maid" idea last summer in Boise, Idaho, was requested by the treasury department to introduce the idea in the Chicago area.

Attractive, Industrious.

The comely "maids" who compose the Northwestern unit are representatives of various campus organizations who have been selected on the basis of their "stamp appeal." They are attractive, industrious girls with a friendly smile and—above all—the "appealing approach."

"We have found our method of selling war stamps is much more successful than merely sitting in a booth and letting people come to us," explained Miss Lake, general of the unit. She pointed out that people buy stamps more quickly when they are approached individually.

Blue Hats, Red Earrings.

If the occasion is a formal party and the girls, themselves, have dates for the dance, both formals and dates must wait until the "Minute Maids" have made their appearance in uniform. After they've taken care of their stamp sales for the evening, the girls rush back to sorority houses and change from the blue uniforms into their formal gowns.

Squads of Six.

The "Minute Maids" usually work in squads of six and the group is limited to approximately 18 girls. Mary Mitchell and Martha Loecker are the two "colonels" of the Northwestern unit. Leon Krand, head of the university's physical education department, is sponsor and spokesman of the group.

"We hope to inspire the formation of "Minute Maids" on other university campuses thruout Illinois," commented Mr. Krand. He said that several western universities have already organized their units.

'Minute Maids' Boost Stamp Sale

JOYCE KILMER LEAGUE TO SEE PUPPET SHOW

Members of the drama group of the Joyce Kilmer league will reverse their usual procedure when they go to the Kungsholm for dinner at 6:30 o'clock Tuesday. Instead of entertaining guests, as they have done several times this year, the group will be entertained with a presentation of "Madame Butterfly" by mechanically operated puppets.

The two hour puppet production will be particularly interesting to these league members because, according to Mrs. Joseph O'Neill, drama chairman, part of the group's program has been the study of puppet making and manipulation.

Juniors of Rogers Park Name 3 New Chairmen

Three new chairmen have been appointed by the Rogers Park Woman's club juniors. Mrs. Sidney Barclay is art chairman and Miss Natalie Powers is music chairman. Miss Edith Holm, former war service chairman, is now residing in Denver, Colo., and Mrs. D. J. Stephen is the new chairman.

Le Cenacle Meeting.

Le Cenacle will meet at 2:30 o'clock Saturday at the Belden-Stratford hotel. The program will include a lecture in French on Van Gogh and his works. Tea will be served.

Breaks Strait Jacket of Nazi Idealogy.

The Metals and Minerals Research building of the Illinois Institute of Technology at 34th and Federal streets represents something more to Ludwig Mies van der Rohe than another architectural success for him. It symbolizes the freedom to work, to teach, and to build that he has found in America.

Ludwig Mies van der Rohe.

Now in his fifth year as director of the school of architecture at the institute, he came here simply because he no longer could confine his art and his work to the strait jacket of Nazi ideology. He believed it less difficult "to be a stranger in a strange land than a stranger at home."

Compares Two Studios.

No better illustration of the reasons for his coming and his happiness now could be found than in comparison of his Berlin studio and his present office in the Art institute.

The studio in Berlin was located in Karlsbad strasse, not far from the reichs chancellery. The homes and buildings in the neighborhood were all four or five stories high and were built shoulder to shoulder. Most dated from the days of the empire. Some had housed the offices of the kaiser's government, then housed Nazi party organizations.

Opening the door of the apartment building, the visitor met the "Heil Hitler" of the janitress. The much loved "Grüss Gott" or "God bless you" of other days was gone.

The knock at the door of the third story studio was answered by a blond, fair faced, youthful assistant who regarded the guest with suspicion.

"Yes?" he would say.

Open for Americans.

Then, if the visitor were American, the assistant catching the accent, would smile and open the door wide. Inside was the sanctuary of an artist who cherished freedom — outside were the agents of a government which sought control over every act of the individual.

The studio was small, well lighted, and white walled. Here was evidence of the intellect of the man who lived there, books in many languages, modern paintings, which somehow had escaped the firebrand of Hitler youth bent on imposing the Nazi kultur. The photographs were of the great works of Van der Rohe.

Here was an old picture of the German embassy in Petrograd — now Leningrad, Russia. Van der Rohe had supervised its construction in the days of the czars. There was a photograph of the residence museum he had designed for Mrs. Koeller-Mueller of the Hague to house her famous Van Gogh collection. And over there a picture of the German pavilion he planned and executed for the world's fair in Barcelona, Spain, in 1929. And everywhere were photographs of the Bauhaus at Dessau, of which he once was director.

Dessau School Flourished.

The Bauhaus, an architectural school of which he became head in 1930, flourished in Dessau from 1923 until 1932. Then in rented space in an old Berlin factory it carried on until 1933, when, slowly strangled, it died.

The visitor to the studio in late 1937, had he asked for Van der Rohe, would have been answered with, "Why — he's in America."

It was then he came to the United States for the first time. He did not know how long he would stay—until John Holabird, Chicago architect, and H. T. Heald, president of the Illinois Institute of Technology, invited him to become director of the institute's school of architecture. It was then, with promise that he could teach as he wanted, that he decided to make America his home.

In his new studio here, on the ground floor of the Art institute, the real Van der Rohe feels himself again.

Just "Mies" to Pupils.

When he first came to the school students addressed him as Mr. van der Rohe, but that long ago gave way to "Mies." And those who study under him call him that with a familiar and affectionate respect.

One student, recently graduated, a granddaughter of the famed American architect Frank Lloyd Wright, once asked Van der Rohe, "Mies! Why are we allowed so little self-expression?"

He pondered the question in view of his insistence that his students in their four years limit themselves to his four courses — drawing, construction, function, and architectural art. He told her to come for her answer the next day.

When she arrived for her answer he handed her paper and pencil and told her to write her name. "There," he said, "is a matter of self-expression. First you learned the ABCs. Then you learned to write. The way you write you learned last of all. So is it with architecture. First you learned the fundamentals, then how to build. The way you choose to build comes last. That is self-expression."

Van der Rohe, who lives at 200 East Pearson street, has already taken out his first papers and soon will be an American citizen. At 56, Van der Rohe, who is medium of height, dark, and somewhat stocky in build, has finished plans for the new campus of the Illinois Institute of Technology on the south side.

In his words, "I like America; I like its people; and I particularly like Chicago."

Pins Pilot's Wings on Son

It was a happy day for Lt. Charles J. Perrin and his mother, Mrs. Margaret Perrin, 1702 Summerdale avenue, when she pinned his shiny, silver pilot's wings on the khaki of his army uniform. Mrs. Perrin journeyed to Luke field, Arizona, to see her son graduated. He served as master of ceremonies the night before at the class party attended by 500 parents and flyers.

To Wed Soldier

Mr. and Mrs. P. H. Becker, 5615 North Sacramento avenue, announce the engagement of their daughter, Marjorie, to Frank J. McKay, son of Mrs. Hazel McKay, 1904 Pratt avenue. McKay is stationed in Fort Knox, Kentucky, with the armored force of the army.

CASINO SINGERS KEEP TUNE THRU SEVENTY YEARS

Club Formed After Great Chicago Fire.

BY EILEEN BURKE.

In 1872, when Chicago was still smoke stained and bewildered after the great fire of the previous year, the Catholic Casino male chorus was organized. During the period of readjustment, seven civic minded parishioners of St. Francis of Assisi church, 1206 Newberry avenue, saw a way to safeguard the religious and social welfare of their community thru founding an organization which would exemplify the best in choral singing with its attendant good fellowship. So they got together in the parish hall and formed the Casino chorus.

The wobbly little organization grew up with unexpected suddenness. Its membership became city-wide. Business men and professional men—men with white collar jobs and those with "overall" jobs—all gathered to blend lusty voices at the weekly Casino song fests.

Must Love Singing.

There were only two membership requirements. They were a love of singing and the quality of being a "good fellow." A nonprofit organization, the 71 year old chorus has constantly served its members and the public with the same hearty good fellowship which colors its Tuesday night meetings at 811 Oakdale avenue.

It is traditional that the chorus stand by each members in his joy as well as his sorrow. Singing at the wedding or the requiem mass of a member or friend of the organization is regarded as an important duty by all other members.

Songs for Unfortunates.

Thruout its existence, the Casino has repeatedly furnished musical concerts for inmates of hospitals, orphanages, and old peoples' homes. The organization has supplied choral music for religious institutions on special feast days, at jubilees and dedications. It has always stood ready to lend voices in sacred or secular music to honor a church or civic dignitary.

During the Century of Progress exposition, the Casino was the first male chorus to advertise Chicago over the NBC network. The group also sings on the Chicagoland church hour over W-G-N and has taken part in a number of W-G-N Christmas programs. A standing engagement is the singing of a requiem mass at St. Joseph's cemetery every Decoration day.

Sixty Faithful Members.

The Casino now has more than 60 members who come faithfully to its weekly meetings. Some of the older members are walking with canes, but their voices still retain much of the quality they had as young men. In many instances, fathers sing beside their sons. The oldest living member is Lawrence Schlitt of 5417 North Glenwood avenue, who joined the Casino in 1889.

Every rehearsal is closed with the Lord's prayer, sung for absent members represented by the 14 stars on the Casino's service flag. One of the stars is for Capt. Adalbert Huguelet, former director of the chorus, who entered the army last fall and is now overseas.

Youngest director in the history of the chorus is Gregory Konold of 2217 Ridge avenue, Evanston, who succeeded Capt. Huguelet. Konold is also on the music staff of De Paul university and directs the glee clubs at Rosary college, River Forest, and at Loretto High school.

Many in Church Choirs.

As a whole, the selection of voices does not present a problem to the Casino because almost all members sing in their various parish choirs.

Members who for some reason are prevented from attending rehearsals with reasonable regularity become, automatically, passive members. The same rule applies to those members who are aging and feel that their voices are no longer a musical asset to the group. In this way, the stability of the chorus and the progress of rehearsals is assured, said Konold.

Preparing Annual Concert.

Rehearsals are now being held for the Casino's 71st annual concert which will be given Sunday, May 16, at St. Alphonsus Athenæum auditorium, 2936 North Southport avenue. Forgoing its usual custom of holding the concert downtown, the Casino has planned an informal program.

Plans for the concert are under the direction of Theodore K. Handing of 1462 West Balmoral avenue who is serving his fourth term as president of the Casino. Assisting him are Adalbert Kirchten, chairman of the board, and Leo S. Eifel, vice president of the organization.

TALK OF THE HOUR CLUB WILL HEAR LECTURE SERIES

World Affairs Speakers Are Scheduled.

In its second year the Talk of the Hour club, North Shore chapter, a group of "civic minded people who believe in adult education," will present a series of five lectures on world affairs beginning at 8 o'clock tomorrow at the Orrington school, Evanston. A club membership will admit two persons to each lecture. There will be an informal question and answer period following the talks with Dr. Franklin D. Scott, associate professor of history at Northwestern university, as chairman.

Speaker for the first lecture will be Prof. W. A. Sharffenberg of Shanghai and Singapore, director of the Institute of Oriental Studies in Shanghai for 22 years. The professor was in Mukden when the Japs took over Manchuria and will tell the story of being bombed and driven from home as a refugee.

Greek College President.

At a second lecture, scheduled for April 1, the speaker will be Ernest W. Riggs, president of Anatolia college, in Greece, and internationally known for his work in the Near East. He escaped from Salonica, Greece, a few hours before the Germans took over the college buildings for their headquarters. Mr. Riggs has served as chairman of a child welfare committee for thousands of orphans under the care of the Near East Relief.

Third speaker in the series will be Dr. Richard Struna, radio commentator and military authority, who was the last American to leave Czecho-Slovakia before America's entry into the war. He returned to the United States in June, 1941, after having lived under Hitler and the Gestapo for two years. In World War I., Dr. Struna was an officer in the Czech army and lived as a prisoner of war in a Russian prison camp for two years. His topic of discussion in the lecture, April 26, will be "Can Russia Defeat Hitler Alone?"

Former Chiang Aid.

Also scheduled for lectures on the club's 1943 program are Drew Pearson, radio commentator and newspaper columnist, and Col. M. Thomas Tchou, Chinese scholar and statesman. Col. Tchou was formerly secretary to Gen. Chiang Kai-shek. He drafted China's housing, factory, and labor relations laws.

OUR TOWN

Paragraphs About People You May Know

WHEN the play "Our Town" was given recently by the Twin College players of Mount St. Scholastica college and St. Benedict's college, both in Atchison, Kas., two of the leading rôles were played by north side girls. They are Miss Elizabeth Goulet, 4414 North California avenue, and Miss Shirley Obear, 2511 Jarvis avenue. Miss Goulet, a sophomore, was active in dramatics in St. Scholastica academy here until her graduation in 1937. She is president of her college class. A junior, Miss Obear's first interest is in chemistry, her major subject. However, her hobby is dramatics, and she is a veteran of the college stage, having appeared in many of the Twin College players' productions.

On the committee in charge of arrangements for the fourth annual religious embassy, held recently at Brown university, Rhode Island, were two north side men: James H. Austin, 1400 Lake Shore drive, and Ellis E. Fuqua of Waukegan. The embassy, sponsored by the Brown Christian association, was a two day meeting of students with religious leaders from many New England colleges

CHARLES BROWN, 14 years old, was elected the first mayor of junior city government of the Frances Cabrini homes last week by more than 200 youthful voters. Also elected were Virginia Poston and George Anderson, judges; Don Trachsler, prosecutor; June Ramstrom, clerk; James Brown, bailiff, and John Cali, Jimmie Noland, Anna Ficarella, June Anderson, and James Brown, council members.

In recognition of her contributions to contemporary writing, the Eugene Field society has named Mrs. Harry R. Miller of Pasadena, Cal., an honorary member. Mrs. Miller is the former Miss Lina Miner, who taught in the old W. C. Goudy school from 1892 to 1912. After retiring from teaching, she turned to writing books for young children. The honorary membership was awarded for her book, "Play Days with Billy and Betty."

Stanley Johnston Talks on Sportsmen Spotlight.

BY LARRY WOLTERS.

Stanley Johnston, Chicago Tribune war correspondent and author of "Queen of the Flat Tops," will be a guest of Bob Becker on his program over W-G-N at 3 p. m. today. Johnston will tell about dogs that go to sea and dogs he has seen in battle. Becker will also give a report on the army's sentry dog training program at Fort Robinson, Nebraska.

W-G-N's new chief of production, Lewis James, has been in radio as a tenor since 1921. He's one of the real old timers. For a decade from 1926 to 1936 he was featured with the Revelers, probably the best known of all radio quartets.

What was formerly the Ben Bernie show on CBS, because of the illness of the Old Maestro, is now "Keep the Home Fires Burning," a program of relaxing music, addressed mainly to workers in war plants. Jack Fulton Jr., formerly tenor soloist on the show, has gone east and is singing with Bob Crosby's orchestra.

Something new at W-G-N is the feminine sound effects technician. First of her sex to undertake this rôle at the station is Genevieve Capstaff. W-G-N is feeling the man power pinch. Approximately 50 per cent of the station's male personnel, as of Dec. 7, 1941, has enlisted for service in the army, navy, or answered the call for other war duties.

The National Association of Broadcasters will hold a conference at the Palmer House from April 27 to 29 to consider the rôle of domestic radio stations with regard to the war effort. Government officials will be on hand to let the broadcasters hear their viewpoints.

Miss Claire will be supported by an augmented chorus, a cast of well known radio actors to play the speaking rôles, and the W-G-N symphony orchestra under the direction of Henry Weber. Robert Trendler will direct the chorus.

All the familiar Coward songs, "I'll See You Again," "Tokay," "Zigeuner," "Call of Life," and "Small Café," will be presented.

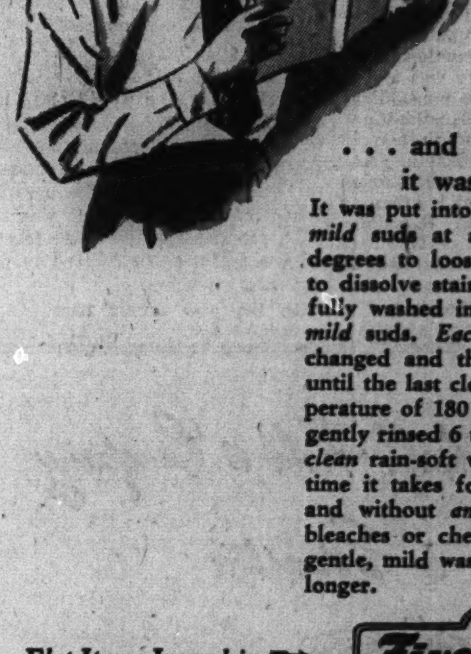
This Shirt went to Edgewater



... and here is the way it was washed—

It was put into a clean, creamy very-mild suds at a temperature of 100 degrees to loosen insoluble soils and to dissolve stains. Then it was carefully washed in four successive very-mild suds. Each time the water was changed and the temperature raised, until the last clean suds was at a temperature of 180 degrees. Then, it was gently rinsed 6 times in six changes of clean rain-soft water. All this in the time it takes for home washing ... and without any harmful acids, bleaches or chemicals. This type of gentle, mild washing makes shirts last longer.

WOMAN LEADS THREE LIVES—ALL AIM AT AXIS

Glenview Radio Actress Also Raises Family.

BY ANN FORD.

Not many can claim the home front record of this energetic north sider! As Helen Trent, Virginia Clark, and Mrs. G. O. Bengston, she's drawn three beads on the enemy!

Mrs. G. O. Bengston.

A resident of Glenview, Mrs. Bengston is a hard working member of the Glenview service organization and the Glenview library committee looking to the reading needs of service men stationed in nearby camps.

Appeals to Listeners.

Playing the title rôle in "The Romance of Helen Trent," broadcast to an estimated 6,000,000 listeners Monday thru Friday over the Columbia Broadcasting system, she appeals to her housewife followers to go all-out in coöperating with their local OCD salvage drives.

As Virginia Clark, her professional radio name, she guest stars on household programs to help further these drives. After a recent appearance on June Baker's morning program over W-G-N, one of her most faithful followers responded with beautiful, handmade layettes for the wives of army and navy enlisted men.

And, of course, she never says "no" when a U. S. O. center asks her to help on their entertainment bill.

Gordon Sets Pace.

Hers is a full day. It begins early in the morning when six week old Jimmie Bengston wakes and cries out for attention. It includes getting her 13 year old son, Gordon, off to school. Gordon, incidentally, is an avid devotee of good music, and on the side, Mrs. Bengston confesses, she has to "bone up" on the classics to keep pace with him.

On weekdays, soon after 9 o'clock, she sets out for the Glenview station to go downtown for her broadcast. Time was when she jumped into her car, and the distance was covered in a few minutes. Came gasoline rationing and she invested in a pair of high boots for the mile and a half tramp. These she checks at the station and picks up later for the hike home.

Rehearses Special Message.

Rehearsal begins in the radio studios at 10:30. Perhaps there is a special message about buying war bonds she wants to make vivid for her listeners. Or this may be the week she is urging the housewives to save their tin cans or kitchen grease. Whatever her appeal, she knows that if it's properly made, millions will respond. Helen Trent's words carry weight.

Home by 2 o'clock, the baby's needs tended to, she turns to her war work in Glenview. Mrs. Bengston is proudest of her efforts on the library committee. Several months ago this group canvassed the cadets at the Glenview Naval Training station to discover what they missed most away from home. One answer stood out above all others—"our home town newspapers."

Home Town Gazettes.

And so the committee set out to see what could be done about it. A list of the home towns of the cadets was secured from the navy chaplain at the station. Money was raised by a series of parties of which the radio actress was chairman. Now, in the day rooms at Glenview there are approximately 200 newspapers, covering every state in the union, and including "gazettes" from towns as obscure as Wakefield, Neb., and Decorah, Ia.

In this project which is unique in the United States, the committee subscribes for six month periods. As a new group of boys enters the training station, the canvass is remade, and a new lot of papers ordered.

Camp Skokie is the special charge of the Glenview service organization. Marooned without movies or adequate transportation facilities, this camp is in greater need of recreation than most other north shore military establishments.

Parties for Camp Skokie.

On the third Friday of every month, the organization gives a party for the boys at Camp Skokie. It supplies 65 girls and the refreshments. Mrs. Bengston usually arranges for the transport of several girls, adds her bit to the refreshments, and procures talent from her circle of radio friends to liven the evening.

This is the group's "grand effort" each month, but there are smaller parties each week. When plans fall thru, some one takes sick, Mrs. Bengston is always there to lend a hand.

For one woman—even with three names—you'd think this would be contribution enough. But it isn't. To this she's added a husband—the greatest contribution of all, she insists. He's in Washington, D. C., working long hours with the war production board, while she's carrying on at home.

100 WALLER HIGH STUDENTS JOIN HONOR SOCIETY

One hundred students of Waller High school have been invited to join Sigma Tau Sigma honor society on the basis of their scholarship, attendance records, and their reputations for good citizenship.

At the opening meeting of the society for the new semester, George Patterson was elected president; Shirley Walker, vice president, and Carmeline Teolis, secretary.

Plans of the group call for a Higher Scholarship week celebration in May, a schedule of educational films for all students, and a series of round table discussions at Waller with other schools on current issues.

The War as Fighters See It

From Walter L. DeVinck, electrician's mate, 2d class, to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. August DeVinck, 2212 Sherman avenue, Evanston. DeVinck, in the navy since December, 1938, was at Pearl Harbor, participated in four naval battles in one of which his ship was sunk. After being on a small island for a week the survivors were picked up and taken to Australia. DeVinck made the trip to America on an oil tanker.

Everything here [America] is like an unbelievable dream, for I've spent so much time convincing myself that I'd never reach the United States again until after the war.

Walter L. DeVinck.

"The food is like —— well my first meal was so good for a change from those I'd eaten over there that tears of appreciation and thanksgiving were really hard to hold back. I can safely say that you can smell the difference in the air alone, taste America in everything you eat.

"It's absolutely incredible to notice such tremendous differences between the quality of things you hear, see, smell, feel, etc., here and in other lands. Mother, I sincerely believe that there was a garden of forbidden fruit—a God's special creation of the best which we now call America. I'm still so nervous and jumpy about being here that I just can't settle down to a normal state of mind just yet.

"Words, written or spoken, will never reveal to the people of this country just what a paradise they live in. The only ones who will realize are those now fighting on the war fronts—the sons and daughters who are now in no position to relay the facts that all American people should know. The man behind the man behind the gun is the one on whom we depend to win this war.

"Man, what a treat; desks to write on, soft lounge chairs, good radio programs, soda fountains, canteens, cokes, clean shower rooms, plenty of liberty, and time off and beautiful women are all over the place. The first pretty girl I saw on the train going across the bridge to the city looked so welcome to my eyes that I wanted to stare at her.

"I feel like some one who is getting a new start in life—a new chance to survive. I'm happy again."

From Corp Robert E. Witt to his "Dear Mom"—Mrs. Edna Witt, 3735 Bosworth avenue. Corp. Witt, member of a coast artillery unit, was reported missing in action after the fall of Corregidor in May, 1942. His mother believes Corp. Witt to be a prisoner of the Japs.

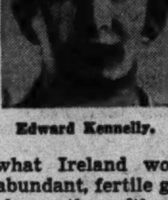
"I may be a little early for this but you can keep this part of the letter on file for when I get home. Here 'tis, the first dinner I would like to have you cook for me after I get off the train. Of course I'll want . . . over to eat with me and you can invite any one you wish to but—ah, yes—the menu.

Robert E. Witt.

"Let's see now, nice pork roast, mashed potatoes and gravy, pickles and olives, waldorf salad, creamed wax beans, applesauce, sweet potatoes and a pineapple juice drink. For dessert, coffee, one of your chocolate layer cakes [is three layers too much?], one of grandma's and one of Aunt Anna's apple pies and a big dish of chocolate pudding with lots of whipped cream. Do you think it's possible or am I asking too much?"

From Corp. Edward Kennelly, infantry regiment medical detachment, in Hawaii, to his friend, James W. Conklin, 5967 North Oconto avenue. Corp. Kennelly married Miss Carlotta Nelson of Park Ridge shortly before he sailed. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin M. Kennelly, 5647 North Harlem avenue. Corp. Kennelly is a graduate of St. Ignatius High school.

"The islands are a revelation and a disappointment. My literary perusals had led me to expect too much. When the island first appeared out of the mists of the sea, a brilliant emerald mound rising like a green felt poker table from the very lap of Neptune, it was the picture that I had always held in my mind of what Ireland would be like, lush, abundant, fertile greenness, moist and always the softly rolling sea.



Edward Kennelly.

"I had expected hot sands, bamboo trees, and towering coconuts. Of course they are all growing here but not in the amount that you would expect. And I can assure you no Hedy Tondelayo in brilliant sarong offered to make 'tiffin' for me. As a matter of fact what most of the kids wear here might be called a modified zoot suit, sans shoes, of course.

"When we disembarked we were loaded into trucks and sent to our destination. If you can imagine a tour thru the Lincoln park conservatory on a tricycle you have a faint idea of the beauty of the glorious flowers along the roadside. Its splendor after the gloomy hellishness of our ride across was almost too much for my intoxicated senses. I just grinned like an idiot and with benign superfluity endeavored to point out the beauties to my enchanted companions.

"We were so pleased to see land that I think we would have waved to Der Fuehrer himself."

TRIBUNE WILL PRINT 3 DETAILED LETTERS FROM YANKS WEEKLY

The War As Fighters See It department provides a medium wherein letters from service men and service women received by relatives and friends may have a wider circle of appreciative readers.

That more space may be given to letters which, because of their interest, merit more than excerpts, but three letters will be selected for publication each week. The briefest of letters, however, will be given equal consideration. Even the postal card message may contain a nugget of originality. For each letter printed in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, $5 will be paid the sender.

Senders of letters are asked to comply with the following suggestions:

Send COPIES of the treasured letters, do NOT send the originals. Do not send framed photographs or scrapbooks. THE TRIBUNE cannot be responsible for letters lost in transmission, nor return the letters.

Photographs of the letter writer and a brief biography of the writer are desired. Those requesting return of the pictures should write the request and address on the back of the pictures, but THE TRIBUNE regrets that it cannot accept responsibility for such return.

Address Service Letter Editor, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, Chicago, Ill.

From 1st Lt. William G. Meade, member of an ordnance company in North Africa, to his wife, Mrs. Louise Meade, 1109 North Long avenue, Oak Park. Meade, a graduate of the University of Illinois in 1938, was employed as a chemist in the Riverdale works of the Acme Steel company, until he entered the army in May, 1941.

The days are hot and the nights are cold. The dust is terrific and when it does rain—which is seldom—it turns into a nice gooey mud. The climate isn't too bad in many respects, however, and it certainly beats that of Ireland or England.

"These folks are a strange lot. Some of the homes are modern and nice, and some of the people are well educated and clean. Others are a strange mixture of races. Some of them look as if they never had a bath and I am firmly convinced that this is true in most cases. They are in rags mostly. They wear their clothes until they rot and then they patch them and wear them until the patches rot.

"Some live with their chickens, goats, and sheep, all in the same room. They beat their animals and their wives. They steal anything, and I guess some would probably slit your throat for a dime or less.

"The animals look like they are almost starved to death. The dogs used to dig up our garbage as fast as we would bury it and then some of the native kids would chase the dogs so they could get at the garbage. I guess much of this was due to the fact that the Germans took every bit of available food but I don't doubt that much of this went on before. Needless to say the situation is improving considerably since we took over.

From Aviation Cadet Robert F. Williams to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Williams, 3432 North Albany avenue. Williams, a graduate of Roosevelt High school, studied electrical communications at the University of Colorado. He is stationed now at Enid, Okla.

"Just another day and I'll be going into my third year in the army. That's a long time for a guy like me to be hanging around with but one employer. Now I look back to the dreadful days of Camp Wallace and its mud, the Fort Bliss auxiliary camp and its sand and wind, Fort Bliss proper in brick barracks, then the Louisiana maneuvers, insects and vermin; Aberdeen proving grounds and the intensive study; back to Fort Bliss and the 8th ordnance detachment; to Ellington field, Tarrant field, and finally San Antonio. From there on the air has held my interest. Thus two years of travel experience and education, in a form.

Robert Williams.

"Life as a whole has been a fast moving thing to those of my generation. Two world wars, a depression unequaled in history, a three-term President, men flying in large numbers, the political issues, education. Really a breath taking pace.

"I don't regret the last two years devoted to the service. It is little enough to pay for having enjoyed the 24 years before in a free country."

LINGUIST UPTON MAKES SPEECH PHONETICS EASY

Ready to Reveal Studies of 60 Years.

To quote his own words, Linford H. Upton is all set to throw "a floodlight on speech." Mr. Upton, who resides at 2623 Burling street, has been a student of phonetics for 60 odd years, and now is prepared to solve the problems of pronunciation for all who will listen.

Have you ever been thrown by "threw" and through?" Have you puzzled over why "dough" and "low" should ryhme? Has the spector of the "ow" in "bough" risen to taunt you?

Has Answer for World.

Then you'll have no difficulty understanding why Mr. Upton feels his work in phonetics is what the English speaking world has been waiting for.

"Never begrudge the time and effort spent improving your pronunciation," cautioned Mr. Upton, who is a playground attendant and instructor when not at work on phonetics. "It pays big dividends. Often [in phonetics] it make the difference between derision and respect, between poverty and plenty, between success and failure."

In Mr. Upton's system there are 36 basic sounds and therefore 36 symbols in his alphabet. It does not use capital letters in the conventional way, because, as the originator points out, "they are an unnecessary complication." Instead, the use of capitals helps increase the common alphabet from 26 to 36 characters.

Each Letter Has Sound.

"Remember," he says emphatically, "that each of our letters always has the same sound and every sound always takes the same letter."

There are four "a's" in the new alphabet. The capital "A" is always long, as in "ate." The small "a" is always short, as in "at." The characters for the open "a," as in "ah," and the "a" in "saw" defy reproduction, because as yet there are no such symbols on the linotype keyboard.

And so with the other vowel sounds. Mr. Upton's alphabet has three "e's," two "u's," two "i's," but only one "o."

Makes Longhand Practical.

"Now, for the first time in the history of the English language, phonetic longhand correspondence is practical," the pedant states.

To prove the practicality of the scheme, Upton has used two young women—Miss Marie Winiger, 3828 Lincoln avenue, and Miss Tosca Menicocci, 2317 22d place, for guinea pigs.

They report that they were able to conquer the 36 character alphabet in 35 minutes, and that within an hour's time they were able to read and write in the phonetic symbols. Both are excited over its possibilities.

Just as soon as enough people have become interested, Upton plans to issue a magazine, either weekly or monthly, in phonetics as a pronunciation service to the public.

When the first numbers of the periodical roll off the press, he will have realized the ambition of 60 years. In the meantime, he advises consulting one of the four page pamphlets he has just completed. Of these he says, lyrically:

"You have time enough to read them,

BLUMENTHAL BOYS —6 OUT OF 10—GET SET TO TACKLE JAPS

Lacking one, there were enough boys for a football team in the Timothy Blumenthal household before the war started. Mr. and Mrs. Blumenthal like to think back on all the noise the boys used to make around the house and the fun they had together—the 10 of them. But things are pretty quiet now at their home at 2930 Lakewood avenue and six service stars in the front window tell why.

It's because sweat shirts have been replaced by khaki uniforms. Baseball bats have been discarded for rifles. And the brothers who fought noisy games of football in the back yard are busy learning, they say, how to "tackle a few Japs." A half dozen Blumenthal boys are in the army.

Corp. Richard and Pvt. Edward Blumenthal are both stationed at Sault Ste. Marie in the infantry. Corp. Walter is in Panama and Mathew is stationed in Hawaii. Timothy Jr. is somewhere overseas and James, the last Blumenthal son to enlist, is stationed in Texas. All the boys attended St. Alphonsus school and Lane Technical High school.

Now Mr. and Mrs. Blumenthal have only two sons at home. They are Harry, 16, and Raymond, 12. Edward and William, two older sons, are married. Their father is a war worker at the Commonwealth Edison company.

NORTH SIDE OCD WILL OPEN WAR HOUSING CENTER

Home Owners May Apply for Remodeling.

Arthur Kruggel, chairman of division 6 of the OCD, has announced the opening of a war housing center office in division headquarters, 2045 Lincoln Park West.

The local war housing center will list family units available for war workers and also will receive applications from property owners who desire to have their properties converted into multiple living units for war workers under the conversion program of the government.

Will Scan Applications.

An initial scrutiny of applications for conversions will be made by the housing center to determine whether the property in question is eligible for conversion. If the investigation is affirmative, applications will be turned over to the headquarters of the war housing center, 120 South La Salle street, for a further examination, according to Kruggel.

From the headquarters, the applications will go to the Home Owners' Loan corporation, which will draw up a lease together with tentative conversion plans and submit them to property owners. Costs of the conversion will be borne at the outset by the government thru the HOLC and amortized over a seven year period from the rent paid for the additional housing quarters.

Government to Pay.

The government will pay property owners a fixed rental over the period of the leases, regardless of whether or not all living units are fully occupied, said Kruggel. The converted properties will be turned back to the owner at the end of seven years in rentable condition.

Property owners may obtain applications for the conversion phase of the program at the division headquarters. They may also list any unoccupied dwelling units which may be rented to war workers. Further information concerning the government program, Kruggel said, may be secured from any of the 19 community war housing chairmen of the division, or from any real estate firm in the community.

Plan Community Surveys.

If a shortage in room accommodations appears imminent in any community, the WHC community chairman, working together with local churches and social and civic groups, will ascertain additional supplies of rooms to meet the demands.

Chairmen will appoint committees to assist in making surveys to determine buildings available for conversion purposes. Then owners will be contacted and presented with the WHC plan.

List Community Chairmen.

Other chairmen are: Arthur Pohlman, Northtown; Allan E. McDonnell, Sheridan-Devon; George D. Wilkinson, Clark-Devon; John M. Sherley, Rogers Park-Clark street; Clarence Judd, Indian Boundary; Earl E. Shipley, Howard district.

The division war housing center office will be staffed by volunteer workers and real estate men in the division recommended by community chairmen and the division chairman.

She got 'im Neath a "TURKISH CORNER"!

Back in the gay nineties there was a lot o' frills attached to a gal puttin' the hooks into an unsuspectin' feller. Take fr' instance this dust-collectin' 'Turkish-Corner' settin' pictured above. Once a designing female maneuvered a guy past the sword of Damocles, then poured a coupla hot cups of Turkish java down his gullet, after which canted a few cantos of Byron, gently stroked his ear with a mitt that was as soft as the downy fluffing of a pussy-willow, deftly stared him into a weak state of gaa-gaa with a pair of dove-like glimmers that looked as full of secrets as a deep pool in the hollow of a wood and then, ah, then, when the deadly, pungent, exotic fumes of an incense burner had completely numbed his remaining senses, extracted an "I love you, I love you, my little pigeon, will you be mine" out of him 'fore he regained consciousness—them was trimmings, we'll say! Them was frills, hey, hey!

Well, we've all been suckers for succotash in our day, and trimmings, frills and fancy do-dads, have gone a long way towards brightening up the otherwise horrid grind. But for a few, few moments, as life goes, we here at Skokie, will have to eliminate some of the fancy things we used to love to do. However, you'll find that SUN-GLO service will still help you 'Kick the Mule around' . . .

Minor Weak Spots May Grow Like Weeds.

BY LOUISE BARGELT.

In any pre-spring checkup of the interior of your house, most homes will reveal certain small weak spots that are minor enough in themselves, but which can grow like weeds and even drive the most poised of hostesses into apology complexes.

By this time the entrance hall may be showing signs of winter's wear and ravages, and if there are scuffed places on the floor around the threshhold it may not be necessary to revarnish the entire floor.

Clean, Sand and Varnish.

One can try a varnish patchup job first—that is if the varnish is not worn thru, but only scuffed and soiled. First, all surface soil should be removed with a damp cloth wrung out from mild soap suds and dried immediately. After this one can use a fine sandpaper and then apply a fresh coat of varnish. To prevent a "patched" look the varnish should be well brushed out at the edges.

If there are scratches in the varnish they can be removed by running turpentine into them and then rubbing them lightly. In case the wear has gone thru to the bare wood the same process can be followed, except that two or more coats of varnish probably will be needed for the refinishing work. If the varnish is in a definitely bad tate all over, it is best to remove what is left of the old finish and refinish from the bare wood floor.

By spring many a house is crying out for more storage space, closets, and shelves.

Enlarge Shallow Closets.

It may be that with a comparatively small investment in materials you can have all the closet space you need. Partitions can be removed from shallow closets, and double doors set a foot farther in the room. Then a full length mirror inside one door and plenty of rods and racks, and you have increased the general utility and size of the original closet.

Shelves are another clever space saver. In the living room there may be space between a fireplace and a jog in the wall where some extra small shelves can be tucked. Or the window sills may be very narrow and you can widen them with less effort than you think, so you've room for more potted greenery and blooming plants, or more space for books and magazines.

FIVE NORTH SIDE WOMEN END WAR WORK TRAINING

Requirements for enrollment in the tuition free courses at Illinois Tech are a high school diploma, training in mathematics, plus experience in industry or art school which indicates a talent for drafting work. Classes are held on the Institute's west campus, 1951 Madison street.

Monday, March 22

Many kinds of annuals and vegetables can be sown directly in a cold frame, but to be successful the requirements are [1] fine, moist soil; [2] thin sowing; [3] light covering; [4] careful watering; [5] abundant ventilation as soon as the plants appear above ground, and [6] early picking off to prevent overcrowding and the likelihood of damping off.

Seedlings are delicate to handle, but they quickly respond to good treatment. Do not allow them to stand after germination for any length of time, for they must have sufficient room to develop.

Tuesday, March 23

Seed will not germinate well in dry soil. Water the seedbed with a fine spray. Transplanted plants are more husky and have a much better root system than those taken directly from the seedbed.

Seedlings may be transplanted at least once into flats prior to setting in the field or garden. If it is necessary to buy a few started plants be sure to select the green, sturdy, vigorous stock.

Wednesday, March 24

Cuttings from plants grown indoors as house plants should continue if more stock for outdoor planting is wanted. Among these are the coleus, one of the most colorful and useful decorative foliage plants among those most usually grown.

Small 2½ inch plants can be purchased and grown until about May 20 when they can be planted out of doors. One of the most desirable golden leaved varieties is golden bedder, and the red leaved sort, verschaffeltii, also is excellent. They also may be grown from seed.

Thursday, March 25

Sweet peas should be sown as soon as the ground can be worked, for they like cool conditions. To sow, make a wide drill about three inches deep and sow at the rate of one pint of seed to 60 feet of drill.

Scatter the seed over the drill to avoid overcrowding; if they are crowded thin them out to give space for each plant. If more than one row is wanted, make the rows four feet apart.

Support with chicken wire or brush. This plant is well adapted to suburban sections because of the better atmospheric conditions and abundant sun. The soil should be well enriched. Mulch during hot weather to conserve the moisture.

Friday, March 26

Do not abandon the perennial borders, but continue to develop the plants to obtain maximum bloom. As soon as the plants show growth divide and replant the fast growing, spreading kinds, such as hardy asters, Oswego tea, Shasta daisies, false dragonhead, sweet William, phlox, and goldenglow.

If the plants have formed dense masses lift them, remove the soil, and replace them with fresh soil or give a good application of decayed manure.

Saturday, March 27

Practically all house plants may be shifted now. Use a soil consisting of one-half garden loam, one-quarter peat or leafmold, and one-quarter sand. Mix well together.

A four inch potful of commercial plant food may be incorporated in the mixture. Screen to remove large lumps. Use small pots or of a size that will be careful not to overpot. If old pots are used, clean them by soaking for 24 hours, then scrub clean.

Prepared in coöperation with Garfield park conservatory.

A NEW BEST SELLER RETAIL PRICE IN THE PUBLISHER'S EDITION $2.50

YOURS as a gift if you act at once—this thrilling story of love and intrigue in a land of savage beauty. The time of Congo Song is just before the outbreak of the war—the setting is a small colony of Europeans in East Africa near the headwaters of the Nile. Among a strangely assorted group of nine men lives one white woman. She is Olga, the beautiful Polish girl, now in Africa as the wife of a Belgian scientist. Each man bears a particular relation to the woman—husband, lover, friend, enemy, doctor—while the woman is all things to each of the men . . Sebastian, the mad painter, has been her lover . . . Owen confuses his passion for Olga with a desire to reform her . . . the Nazi, von Brandt, tamer and collector of wild beasts, is a ravisher . . . the professor, Olga's husband, is a husband to her in little more than name . . . his assistant, Retief, is her reluctant lover . . . Henry Wilson, Anglo-American investigator, succumbs to her charms and is tangled in a web of disaster.

What was it that loosed the passions of men in this mountainside Eden? Was Olga's pet gorilla a source of evil, as Owen thought? When Olga's child died she had adopted a baby gorilla that now was almost full grown. Everyone feared him—only Olga could control him.

The characters and action make this one of the most exciting novels of the year—a story of spies and conflict, a story of men and women working out their destinies in a mysterious land of fecundity where civilized controls have been left far behind. Although "Congo Song" sells at retail in the publisher's edition for $2.50, you may have a copy FREE if you join the Literary Guild now.

Drama Critic Discusses Theater Guild Policies

Airs Chicago's Complaints on New York Visit

By Cecil Smith.

NEW YORK [Special].—In the last few weeks Theater Guild subscribers in Chicago have been expressing increasing concern about the character and number of plays they have seen this year. While I have not heard any expressions of real bitterness over the guild's apparently half hearted attempt to redeem its pledges to its Chicago patrons, there is a considerable threat to the continuing success of the subscription plan in a season no more fruitful than the present one.

Last week-end I had an opportunity, as a self-appointed emissary of Chicago's more than 10,000 Theater Guild subscribers, to give what I hoped was a fair representation of Chicago's dissatisfaction to the chief executives of the guild, Lawrence Langner and Theresa Helburn. I explained that I expected to give the subscription situation in Chicago an airing in this article, and asked them for their comments.

As I reminded Mr. Langner and Miss Helburn, Chicago subscribers were promised the usual six plays this year, including Katharine Hepburn in Philip Barry's "Without Love" and also probably the Lunts in S. N. Berhman's "The Pirate." The other four plays, whether originally Theater Guild productions or not, would be of a quality Guild subscribers have learned to expect—tho not always to receive—in the past.

The season we have actually had bears no resemblance whatever to the promises of the prospectus. There have been three plays: An inferior performance of "Junior Miss," which is such a piece of fluff that it has no meaning when it is roughly and grotesquely played; Grace George and C. Aubrey Smith in "Spring Again," a vehicle for ingratiating personalities but certainly not a valuable play; and "Cry Havoc," a reasonably interesting war play in which the benefits of Flora Campbell's admirable acting were neatly counterbalanced by the ineptitude of Margie Hart, the former burlesque stripper.

The Guild still owes its subscribers three plays, and Mr. Langner said that there is a good likelihood that he will have nothing more to send out. The management may have to offer a choice between a refund covering the three plays and a chance to apply the remaining money on renewals of subscriptions in 1943-'44. This is a sad state of affairs, as you and Mr. Langner agree, in the Theater Guild's largest subscription city. [There are more subscribers in Chicago than in New York.]

Mr. Langner explained what has happened to "Without Love." When the prospectus was printed, nobody thought Miss Hepburn would be so determined to leave for Hollywood that she would refuse to go on tour, and even end her New York run while the play was still selling to capacity. When Miss Hepburn's individualistic intention became known, the management thought of sending the play out on tour with another actress, such as Joan Crawford; but Miss Crawford signed for more movies instead, and there seemed to be no other irresistible candidate for the part.

"The Pirate" opened in Madison, Wis., last summer, and skirted all about Chicago without ever playing there. When it finally reached New York it became a hit, with the result that there is no possibility of our seeing it this season. It is not generally known that "The Pirate" skipped Chicago last fall because Mr. Lunt was unwilling to accept James C. Petrillo's edict about the number of local musicians to be hired as standbys, in addition to the rather large complement of touring musicians. Let us hope that Mr. Lunt and Mr. Petrillo will reach some sort of agreement next fall.

The loss from our schedule of "Without Love" and "The Pirate" might have been compensated for by other Guild productions, if the Guild had produced anything else but failures. "Mr. Sycamore" and "The Russian People" collapsed immediately in New York.

Mr. Langner and Miss Helburn profess great love for their midwestern subscribers, and are inclined to ascribe this year's debacle chiefly to bad luck. Bad luck there has been, but I must insist, as I did to them, that there are also indications of bad planning. The planning is bad because nothing is ever planned specifically for Chicago and the middle west, which means that we get castoffs when New York is good and thru with them. Consequently it is impossible to plan a diversified schedule for the year, or even to know when plays are likely to arrive in town. School teachers among the subscribers have several times been forced to miss plays which came during the Christmas holidays or too early in September or too late in May or June; and in general no attempt has been made or at least no successful attempt to bring the subscription plays to Chicago with any regularity of spacing.

The guild boasts of being a national institution. Its subscription audience in the road cities is far larger than the total of its subscribers in New York. Yet the Guild is never willing to open any of its new plays in Chicago, and it is very seldom willing to grant Chicago even two weeks in advance of New York opening.

Geography has a good deal to do with this state of affairs. If Chicago were as close to New York as Boston and Philadelphia are, we should undoubtedly see more tryout performances. But the rail fare from New York to Chicago is no small item, especially for a large cast, and the Guild feels unable to spend such sums of money upon plays which have not earned the right to wear the badge of New York success.

Mr. Langner says the Guild would be willing to send out a good many more brand new plays if Chicago theater managers were willing to pay half the railroad fare. I'am not a fit arbiter of the economics of theater business, and cannot pass judgment on his suggestion, but I should think Chicago managers might do well to consider making such outlays occasionally, in order to bring attractive and up to date offerings to houses which often, like the Harris now, languish in emptiness.

In all fairness it should be pointed out plainly that only a part of the subscription responsibility belongs to the Theater Guild. The subscription plan is operated coöperatively with the American Theater society, which is a coalition of the Guild, the United Booking office, the Shuberts, and other managements. Often managements other than the Guild are loath to commit themselves to subscription, because ticket prices are lower. Sometimes they get fooled, too, as the playwrights company did with "The Eve of St. Mark," which they were so certain would be a smash hit, and which would have made more money in its first three weeks if it had been on subscription.

Drama Notes

Chester Hale, director of "Ice-Capades of 1943" at the Chicago Arena, received his early dance training with the Diaghileff Ballet Russe. Later he toured with Anna Pavlowa's company. Turning to musical comedy, he first encountered Broadway in Irving Berlin's first "Music Box Revue," an entertainment which also boasted Grace Moore as one of its stars. For nine years he served as ballet master of the Capitol theater in New York. He estimates that he has now produced more than 1,500 ballets, precision routines, and novelties. In Hollywood he has produced dance routines for "Anna Karenina," with Greta Garbo; "A Night at the Opera," with the Marx Brothers, and "Rose Marie," with Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy.

"Sons o' Fun," the Olsen and Johnson successor to "Hellzapoppin'," closes at the Winter Garden theater in New York on Saturday, to make way for the incoming "Ziegfeld Follies," and reopens March 29 at the 46th Street theater. The stars leave for Hollywood and picture making in June, but the present plan is to keep the play on Broadway, with Steve Olson, brother of Ole, replacing "Chic" Johnson, and possibly with Marty May in Olsen's rôle. Chicago is not likely to see the musical until fall. The personal record of Olsen and Johnson — which excludes performances of "Hellzapoppin'" in which they did not appear themselves in New York or on the road—amounts to 1,404 performances in "Hellzapoppin'" and, as of next Saturday, 561 in "Sons o' Fun."

A most unusual casting idea is in the offing if John Wildberg and Cheryl Crawford are able to fulfill their hopes. A revival of Shakespeare's "The Tempest" would include Canada Lee as Caliban and Vera Zorina as Ariel. Margaret Webster would direct.

UNIDENTIFIED WOMAN

freckled face with a jerk to peer closely at her. "Why?"

"Because——" She could tell that much, she decided, without betraying Col. Galant's confidence. "Because Clistie asked Bessie that, the night she was murdered. Just that —she didn't explain. Do you know anything about it?"

He considered it slowly.

"Outside of Rigoletto, no," he said finally, his face screwed up with concentration.

Presently they strolled back to the house. When they came to the driveway Victoria stopped and put her hand on Agnew's thin wrist. "Thanks—" she said.

To her astonishment, Agnew patted her shoulder almost tenderly. "You're a nice girl, Vicky," he said. And added quickly, alarmed, "but don't go and cry again——"

"I'm not crying. I'm only——"

"Scared," he finished. "I know. So am I. By the way, I don't suppose you want to tell me why Col. Galant sent for you in such a hurry yesterday?"

"No, I——can't."

"O," said Agnew. "I didn't think so. Well, Vicky, whether you're going to marry Mike or not, ask him about a lawyer. Get one down from New York. I—I don't like that red belt. And the way Beasley acts," said Agnew avoiding her eyes. "Not," he added somberly, "that a lawyer can change any facts."

They went back to the house.

Michael had already sent for a lawyer. "I talked to him over the telephone," he said. "I hope it's all right, Vicky dear. I didn't want to bother you, so I just went ahead and got him. It's Fabre Gleason. He's one of the best. He'll fly down from New York if you—if we," he amended it hastily, "need him. Right away. But if nothing breaks for awhile, he wants to finish a case he's on now. He'd read the newspapers. He said to tell you—that is, for all of us, to sit tight."

"Gleason," said Bessie thoughtfully, "that's the criminal lawyer," and added, thoughtfully, too, "I wish Hollis would telephone."

Hollis, however, did not telephone or come until he arrived just before dinner.

All Are Uneasy as Evening Comes On

It was, all in all, a quiet day. Yet as evening came on, the sense of waiting—waiting for something that must happen, waiting for Beasley to sift and assort the evidence he had gathered so strenuously the previous day, grew almost unbearably tense.

They were all uneasy and as Agnew said, too quiet. Yet there was not much they could say. Every hypothesis had been explored too many times. Every theory had been uttered too often. Every thought had followed the same well worn circle—and eventually met the same baffling wall past which it could not go.

But so far as evidence went, or material clews, there was nothing that day that was new to Victoria. Nothing she saw or heard or remembered that made the smallest chink in that wall.

Certainly there was nothing to suggest Hollis' implication in a plot to sell information to a foreign agent. Except, of course, the maid who walked upstairs and disappeared, but that could mean anything. And nothing.

And Hollis, himself, looking very tired, with fine lines showing around his hard, light blue eyes came in time for dinner. Col. Galant had arranged a leave, he told Bessie shortly. Victoria could not tell from his bearing whether or not Col. Galant had yet questioned him about Joan Green.

Almost immediately after dinner Beasley arrived, too—with a large manila envelope, Maj. Campbell, two state policemen in uniform, and a middle aged woman in black. The manila envelope contained a detailed account of Henry Frame's death, the circumstances surrounding it, and the course of the investigation. One of the policemen was a stenographer and whipped out a tablet and a supply of pencils. Maj. Campbell, his brown face guarded, sat in one of the red leather arm chairs drawn up to the library table. Victoria was sent for, and Hollis, and Michael. And the middle aged woman in black looked at Victoria and at Michael and shook her head, and then at Hollis and nodded.

"That's the man," she said in a weary voice. "I'd know him anywhere. But I never saw the girl, Miss Steane, before, except, of course, her picture in the papers a few weeks ago. And if Joan knew her, she never told me. And I never saw the other man——" she looked at Michael.

She was Joan Green's aunt.

Hollis flushed a bright pink. Beasley said, leaning forward into the light so his long yellow face was in sharp relief and his black eyes gleamed, "Where did you see Hollis Isham?"

The woman had a plain, rather nice face, and an air of honesty. "In Ponte Verde," she said. "I had come to do a little shopping and to see Joan. It was the first time she'd been away from home, you know. She was——" her voice wavered a little, "she was a very quiet girl. She didn't make many friends and she was very keen about her job. Well—he was at the tobacco counter in the hotel. He didn't see us but Joan pointed him out to me and then later told me he had taken her out a few times. To the movies and driving and to dinner. He'd got acquainted with her at camp; at one of the dances there. She said he was rich but that didn't make any difference to Joan," she said sturdily. "Except that—well," she hesitated, "I felt somehow that she liked him more than he liked her. Joan was—very quiet," she said again. "She didn't say much. That was all really. But I remember telling her that there were lots of nice young men in the world and that she was very young."

Hollis put up his fair head. He said, "Mrs. Green, I can't tell you how sorry I am about—about everything," and turned to Beasley. "All right," he said, "I knew her. She was a nice girl. I liked her and I went out with her a few times. Now what are you going to make of it?"

Beasley said to Joan Green's aunt, "So you were worried. You thought there was something not quite——"

Hollis interrupted angrily, "I'll tell you anything you want to know, Beasley. I didn't kill Joan."

"Why didn't you identify her? Why did you pretend you didn't know her?"

"Because—" Hollis began angrily and then stopped short, scarlet, angry, and afraid. Victoria saw that. And Beasley turned to Mrs. Green. "Think now," he said. "Surely Joan talked to you about the Frame murder. Everybody was talking of it. What did she say?"

Mrs. Green drew herself up. "You've asked me that many times. My niece," she said with quiet dignity, "never mentioned the murder of Henry Frame. If she read the newspaper stories about it she never spoke of it to me. I'm absolutely sure that with the exception of Mr. Isham, she knew none of the people concerned with it. And it's my opinion that she didn't know him until after the Frame murder."

"But you know Isham's name," persisted Beasley. "You must have connected it with the Frame murder. You admit you read all about it."

"So did every one else in the county, I imagine," said Mrs Green heavily. "Yes, I knew Hollis Isham's name; at least his last name. Joan said it was Isham. And I've identified him. But I——" she looked at Hollis and said firmly: "I do not believe that this boy killed her. I know he's lying, if you please. It's a long drive home——"

John Campbell said quickly, "We'll send you in a car——" and went to the door with her. At the door they met Bessie. She stared but drew back and let them pass and then, beads swinging and bracelets jangling, swept up to Hollis.

"Hollis, my dear, I heard. I was listening," she said and turned to Beasley. "I'll tell you all about it," she said, twisting her big, swarthy hands. "It's all my fault. Hollis didn't kill her but he didn't tell who she was either because I——"

"Take this," snapped Beasley at the policeman with the tablet.

Hollis interrupted. "I'll tell it, Beasley. I met Joan at one of the dances. I'd seen her in Col. Galant's office. She was a — a nice kid. I liked her. But my mother—"

"I didn't approve of it," said Bessie. "I told Hollis to stop going about with her. I told him—I wouldn't have it. And he stopped. When I found it was — was Joan Green who was murdered, naturally I wouldn't let him tell any one he knew her. It was absurd to drag him into suspicion like that!"

Maj. Campbell returned and quietly closed the door.

Hollis said, "I didn't kill her."

"But you failed to identify her

Agnew, hovering on the outskirts, watched them from the yew hedge.

the morning she was found," said Beasley. "You refused to admit that you knew her. That was before your mother knew her name; before she advised you to keep quiet."

"Yes," said Hollis. "It was crazy. Not to admit it, I mean. But I — I knew what they'd say. That she was murdered here. On the place. Thrown into the river. If I'd told the truth then you'd have said — just what you're saying now. And she—" Hollis was quite white. His long, obstinate upper lip set itself. His blue Steane eyes were very light and cold. He said, "It's as her aunt said. She was a nice kid. And I —liked her. It was a shock——"

Bessie's Story Backed by Victoria, Michael

Beasley said, "But you must have known we'd discover it sooner or later."

Bessie said, "You must try to understand. He ——"

"Mother——"

"Please let me talk, Hollis." She spread her jeweled hands out on the table and leaned forward fixing her large, dark eyes upon Beasley. "He guessed who it was when they described her over the telephone. That is, he didn't guess but it — it sounded like her. He told me that later. And he was horrified and shocked. We all saw that at the time." Her eyes flashed around and she caught Victoria's eyes and Michael's and said demandingly, "'Didn't we, Victoria? Didn't we, Michael?"

"Yes," said Michael. "He was shocked, and surprised."

Victoria remembered Hollis at the telephone.

"Yes," she said, echoing Michael.

"Yes," said Bessie. "But he didn't tell me. He didn't want to alarm me and we — we'd had words about the girl, you see. He didn't——" she swallowed convulsively, "he didn't want to give her up. Yet he wasn't really in love with her, you see."

"O, mother, don't," said Hollis. He turned brusquely away, walked over to the window and said over his shoulder, "Tell the truth. It was murder and I — I didn't want to be mixed up in it. I — it was an impulse. And I looked at Joan there in that beastly little room and I — I couldn't say, 'Yes, I knew her.' I couldn't——" He stopped. The room was very still for a moment. Then he said bitterly, "I was a fool. I know it. And a coward. All right. But I didn't kill her."

Bessie didn't move. Only her great ringed eyes followed Hollis and her hands twisted. Victoria started toward Hollis, realized that sympathy would be another drop of humiliation, and stopped. Major Campbell said to Bessie, "Did you recognize the girl?"

Her great eyes flashed. "No; certainly not."

"Did you ever talk to her? Over the telephone, I mean."

"No," she said violently.

"A woman did telephone to her," said Beasley. "Mrs. Isham, why did you want your son to stop seeing her?"

"Because, she——because I did."

"There must have been some important reason. Did she know anything about Henry Frame's murder?"

Hollis turned around. "Of course not. She knew nothing of it. How could she?"

Bessie said heavily, "I didn't want Hollis to marry her. That's all. I wanted Hollis to marry Victoria. There's the business, you see. Hollis could manage it." She glanced at Victoria. "You must have known that, my dear," she said breezily. "I never really wanted you to marry Michael." She glanced at Michael, too, gave him a queerly polite and self-deprecating smile and added, "Not that I object to you, Michael. I just didn't want her to marry any one but Hollis."

Michael, looking a little amused, said as politely as Bessie, "I quite understand."

Hollis said over his shoulder, "Victoria doesn't care a hang for me, Mike. There never was anything between us. It's just an idea of mother's."

Beasley said, his voice still purring, "But Mrs. Isham, Miss Steane is to marry Bayne. She would have been married to him now except for—" his voice took on an added quality of softness, "except for the fact that Joan Green and Miss Forbes were murdered."

Bessie blinked and said violently, "I didn't kill either of them to stop Victoria's marriage. If that's what you mean!"

Maj. Campbell came forward. "Mrs. Isham, had Joan Green ever come to the house before?" he asked.

Hollis replied, "No. Never."

"Yet she did manage to find her way from the corner where she got off the bus, thru the grounds, to the pine woods."

Hollis shrugged.

"How did she get there, do you think?"

"How should I know? I didn't meet her."

"But she must have met some one. Do you know who?"

"Certainly not," said Hollis. "Unless——"

"Unless what?"

"Well," said Hollis, "there's this maid that was wandering around."

"O, yes," said Beasley. "The unknown woman. You're going to make the most of her, aren't you?"

"It could have been a man," said Hollis. "That's all——"

"I'm told," said John Campbell, "that Miss Green was very good at her job. Did you think so, Isham?"

Hollis looked at him suspiciously. "Why, I don't know. How should I know? Ask the officers she worked for."

"She did have a very retentive memory, hadn't she?"

"I don't know," said Hollis sulkily.

"Did she ever talk of Col. Galant? Or—or anything at all to do with affairs in the office?"

Hollis whirled around. His face was red again and his light eyes snapping.

"Listen," he said. "Col. Galant called me into his office late this afternoon. We've had all this out. Didn't he tell you? Or—I see! He did tell you, and ordered you to question me, too. Well, listen — I didn't sell any military information."

"Hollis!" cried his mother, "You!"

"O, be still, mother. I didn't sell any information. I didn't know anything to sell and I wouldn't have known where to sell it if I had known anything. And I wouldn't have done it anyway."

An hour later he let them go. Without, so far as Victoria could see, adding a scrap to his stock of information, except the fact that Bessie had told Clistie about Joan Green.

"So Clistie Forbes knew the girl!" he cried in triumph.

"Certainly not," said Bessie. "She'd never seen her. She only knew of her — her name and where she worked and how Hollis had got acquainted with her."

"You told Clistie to telephone to the girl. You told her to get the girl here. Then you got rid of both of them."

Bessie turned purple. "I did not!"

In the end both Hollis and Bessie stuck to the explanation.

And when they'd gone he turned all his guns upon Victoria. Michael would have stayed but Beasley made him leave. "We'll come to you again, later," he said, with a little smile on his wide, purplish lips. "Just now I want to talk to Miss Steane."

And then, with the heavy oak door closed, the light from above pouring down, the thick notes about Henry Frame's death and its subsequent investigation before him. Beasley began.

Obviously, Beasley's inquiry about Hollis and Joan Green, his accusations that Hollis had murdered the girl, that Bessie had murdered her and Clistie, constituted only his own manner of inquiry. Victoria herself was still his principal suspect.

Maj. Campbell Listens to Beasley's Story

Maj. Campbell listened — tracing figures on the table with his fingers, his face inscrutable. Once he got up and went to the door and had Jody bring some ice water and poured a glass of it for Victoria. Once he got out cigarets, gave her one and lighted it and put the package near her. Beasley went on.

He referred to the notes of the investigation following Henry Frame's death, John Campbell's notes, no file in the office that now was Beasley's; notes that with every word emphasized the case John Campbell had built up against her.

It was all down in black and white before him — questions John Campbell had asked, questions she had answered.

John Campbell said suddenly, "There's not much use in going back over that evidence, Beasley. We got everything we could get at the time. I don't think, honestly, at this date, you're likely to get anything further."

"O, don't you, John?" asked Beasley sarcastically. "That remains to be seen. If Clistie Forbes was murdered because she knew something about Frame's murder, there are motives in plenty. Or rather suspects in plenty, all with the same motive. Frame kept Miss Steane — and Hollis Isham, and his mother, to say nothing of the kid, Agnew — from using money that belonged properly to them.

"Not only that but there was nothing they could do about it as long as he lived and, since he was embezzling every cent he could, there was a sound reason for him to refuse, utterly, to permit any kind of meddling on their part in the business. He let Hollis work in the office but it was an unimportant clerk's job. Nothing that gave Hollis any insight into the way the business was run. O, there was motive for murder, there! Even Michael Bayne shared that motive. He wanted to marry Miss Steane and — supposing for the sake of argument that it was her money he was interested in and not Miss Steane — he couldn't get hold of that money until Frame was dead. So he had a good motive, too."

John Campbell's lips tightened. "Not at that time, I believe," he said.

Victoria said, "Michael scarcely knew me, then!"

UNIDENTIFIED WOMAN

By MIGNON G. EBERHART

(Copyright: 1943: By Mignon G. Eberhart.)

What Has Gone Before

When Henry Frame, manager of the Steane mills, was found drowned, John Campbell, coroner and state's attorney, accused Victoria Steane of Frame's murder. Victoria had quarreled with Frame about his management of the mills shortly before his death. But the coroner's jury brought in a verdict of suicide after Michael Bayne, manager of a branch mill, discovered Frame had been embezzling from the business. Ten weeks later, at a party given by Colonel Galant at Camp Blakoe, Campbell, now a major in the army, meets Victoria again and, altho sympathetic to her now, tells her that Frame really was murdered and warns her that there may be more murders. Victoria lives with Aunt Bessie Isham and her two sons, Hollis, now in training at Camp Blakoe, and Agnew. Thalia Frame has stayed on with them after her father's death. Victoria has become engaged to Michael, but, with the wedding only two days off, she realizes she does not love him. When she tells Michael this he begs her to think things over again before breaking their engagement. Victoria notices that Clistie Forbes, their loyal housekeeper, seems worried. In the dead of night Victoria hears a scream in the woods. Clistie promises to get Judson, the gardener, to investigate. But Clistie fails to return. When the family report her disappearance they learn that a woman's body has been found in the river. Altho the woman is wearing Clistie's dress, they cannot identify her. Agnew and Michael remember seeing a maid go upstairs the night before, but Lilibelle, the Isham maid, denies it was she. Clistie's body is found in the pumphouse with Victoria's belt around Clistie's neck. When the unidentified woman is discovered to be Joan Green, secretary in Colonel Galant's office, Beasley, the new state's attorney, refuses to believe Victoria did not recognize her. At night Victoria and Agnew search the pumphouse for clews. Agnew is knocked unconscious by an unknown assailant. Thalia tells Victoria that Michael is only marrying Victoria out of chivalry. Victoria then realizes that Thalia is desperately in love with Michael. Colonel Galant summons Victoria to camp and tells her in Campbell's presence that Hollis has been dating Joan Green and that Joan knew some military secrets she might have passed on. He asks her if the phrase "cara nome" means anything to her. He heard Clistie questioning Bessie about it. Victoria seems to have heard the phrase somewhere but cannot recall just where. Campbell escorts Victoria to her car, and when he sees tears in her eyes he kisses her. She kisses back. Judson tells Victoria a spade Clistie borrowed from him is missing.

INSTALMENT X.

CLOUDS shifted so that gradually the light was less and the shadows came nearer. The pine woods and the river took on a quality of sentience, of awareness, of threat. Victoria moved uneasily. "Let's go back, Michael."

"All right. Cigaret?"

They strolled back toward the house. But Michael was deep in thought and as they reached the lighted house said: "John Campbell dropped the case when he still believed it was murder. And then took the trouble to warn you just exactly when. The night before Clistie—and that girl were killed. Why?"

"But he couldn't have had anything to do with it. He didn't know any of us. There would have been no motive."

Michael said slowly, "Last winter, I mean after Henry's death, I thought Campbell was—well, a decent sort. Mistaken but doing what he thought was right. Now—I'm not so sure that he's entirely disinterested and I think it's time to—"

She interrupted him. "But he didn't know Henry! Some one would have known of it! He would have said so!"

"Would he?" said Michael after a moment.

And a little memory returned suddenly from that talk with John Campbell. He'd said, suddenly, "You've forgotten one thing. The fact that he was the kind of man somebody might want to murder." He'd meant Henry Frame.

As if he knew.

The night was quiet and, for that matter, parts of the next day. Or comparatively quiet. Beasley darted into the drive a time or two at top speed in his chugging little car, and shortly went away again without, so far as any of them knew, accomplishing much. He talked to Lilibelle again, reducing her to tears but not to confession. He talked to Ernestine and Jody about the time when they'd bolted the kitchen door. He prowled the house on one occasion, spending some time in Clistie's bedroom. He visited the other bedrooms, too [according to Agnew], and went away with something wrapped in newspaper, under his arm, which was, as Bessie said later, a little unnerving particularly as no one knew what it was.

But before Beasley left, he did tell Michael, who asked him, that the ashes from the furnace had yielded nothing of interest. He did not say what he had expected them to yield.

State troopers came, too, and took more finger prints from the pumphouse. They were there for a long time. Agnew, hovering on the outskirts and watching them from the yew hedge, reported that they went away disconsolately. Certainly the bare, cemented little pumphouse was not a fertile field for clews.

Again they saw nothing of Maj. Campbell. If, however, it was his job to read thru the entire bulk of every telephone conversation Joan Green had taken in shorthand and then typed, during the months of her employment at Camp Blakoe, it explained his absence. Or so thought Victoria. She could not, of course, say anything of it to the others.

"I don't like this Eliot Beasley," Bessie said once. "But anybody is better than Campbell. Thank heaven, he's in the army now and can't have anything to do with this. Or us," she fanned herself with a long chiffon handkerchief.

Victoria could not tell her she was wrong.

The day was hot again, cloudy and very sultry. However, there was not a drop of rain anywhere in the vicinity—which later had its own small significance.

It seemed long because there was too much time to think. Yet in another way it passed very quickly. Certainly, that day, plans were made and last desperate contingencies considered. But in view of the previous days it was quiet—at least to the outward eye.

Bessie Reports on Eleanor Updike's Call

There were, of course, newspapers in full cry now, and reporters. There were telegrams and a few rather cautious telephone calls from friends in the neighborhood. After one such telephone call Bessie came back to the porch fanning herself with long sweeps of her handkerchief, like an actress stealing a scene, and looking rather grimly amused. "That," she said, "was Eleanor Updike. She thinks a spy did it, and wanted to know if we had any Nazi servants!"

"Maybe she meant Ernestine," said Agnew.

Bessie snorted. "She didn't seem to want to talk for very long. She acted as if I were Mata Hari in disguise."

"You'd have to be her ghost then," said Agnew grumpily. "She's been dead for years. Vicky, you're looking kind of peaked—come on and play some tennis with me. It'll do you good."

He made her go while Thalia murmured that nobody would possibly play tennis on a day like that, and Michael showed another photographer and two reporters the pumphouse and the pine woods. But the game of tennis was not a success. Agnew, a remarkably good player with or without his spectacles, was that day erratic and absent minded and before they finished the first set Victoria missed a serve, slipped, skinned her knee, and sitting unexpectedly in the middle of the hot tennis court burst into more unexpected tears.

Agnew, appalled, leaped over the net and ran to look at her knee. "But my gosh, Vicky, it's hardly scratched! My gosh, what are you crying for? My gosh," said Agnew sitting beside her and eyeing her with horror. "Does it hurt like that?"

"N-no—"

"Then what's the matter?"

"Give me your handkerchief."

"Here." He watched her anxiously.

"Sorry," she said. "Thanks."

"Vicky, what's gone wrong between you and Mike?"

"Me and—" She stared at him. "How did you know?"

"Guessed."

"How?"

"I dunno." He shrugged. "No lovelight in your eyes, I guess. Besides, you're so darned quiet. Too quiet, as if you're afraid to let down. Of course, none of us feels exactly jolly. And I know you felt like hell about—about Clistie. So do I. I know it's tough, too, with the wedding postponed and all. But still—"

"I don't think there's going to be a wedding," she said.

He got up briskly and gave her a hand. "Come on over to the bench," he said practically, "and tell me all. When did you decide you weren't in love with Mike, and why?"

There wasn't really much to tell. Agnew, however, understood what there was. "Of course, I see," he said, balancing his tennis racket on his knees. "I thought at the time that it was all too, too romantic. Whirlwind courtship; love at first sight; well, second anyway, then the big rescue and wedding bells. But don't go too far the other way, Vic. Mike's pretty regular, you know." The tennis racket fell over; he bent to pick it up and said, not looking at her: "I don't suppose there's anybody else? Anybody you've got your mind on, I mean."

"No!"

There was a long pause. Agnew put down his racket and got a tennis ball out of his pocket, bouncing it thoughtfully in soft little thuds against the turf. The air was very still; not a leaf in all the green around them seemed to move.

She said presently, "Agnew, who could have killed her?"

He didn't reply for a moment. Then he said abruptly, "Whoever killed Henry, I think. But I don't know who or why."

"I don't suppose that there's any doubt now that Henry was murdered."

He shrugged. "I always rather thought it was murder. But only because he was the kind of man somebody might want to murder. There wasn't any real proof. And there isn't any now, and I imagine there never will be. His murder is important only because it happened. I mean, it seems to have launched—all this."

John Campbell had said that, too; but Agnew knew Henry.

"Agnew," she said impulsively, "do the words Cara Nome mean anything to you?"

"Cara Nome!" He turned his

'Ice-Capades of 1943' Bristles with Fine Talent

Old Time Duo Hit of Show in Waltz Number

By Claudia Cassidy.

About the only thing that can keep me away from an ice show is a ballet, and that reminds me it would be a favor if the Russians and Sonja Henie would stop celebrating rival openings each Christmas night, thereby confusing an otherwise handsome holiday. Consider, by contrast, the polite behaviour of "Ice-Capades of 1943," which came to town between the bookings of Ballet Theater and the Metropolitan Opera, and now is swooping about the Chicago Arena on patriotic ice which looks like what might happen if you got your electrical gadgets mixed and played "Yankee Doodle" on the frigidaire.

This newest in my growing collection of shows on skates bristles with talent and glows with colorful costumes designed by Freddie Wittop, the versatile young Dutchman who invoked Spanish ancestors when as Federico Rey he looked so Castilian as Argentinita's partner. But for all Chester Hale's usually shrewd staging, these resources are not used to the best advantage. The show gets off to a slow start with a section suggesting that if vaudeville ever did die, it has been reincarnated on skates. Not until midway of the first act does "Ice-Capades" begin to capitalize on its quicksilver medium. Then it gains momentum rapidly and winds up brilliantly in the swift, supple skill that is the secret of a good ice revue's irresistible charm.

Despite some vivid young skaters just beginning to cut figures on fame, the hits of "Ice-Capades" are Markhus and Thomas, old timers waltzing like cream poured out of a smooth pitcher, and Joe Jackson Jr., a magnificent clown who has taken up the famous tramp bicycle act where his father left off. Like all crack entertainers, Mr. Jackson makes his own rules. Just when you have convinced yourself that an ice show must move, he gets out on that ice with his battered, belligerent bicycle, and you don't care if it never moves. The man has the rare gift of comic communication, so that you hang on his every gesture as if he held you hypnotized. He has the indescribable mixture of hilarity, sadness, impertinence and gentleness that makes a great clown.

Booking Markhus and Thomas into this otherwise young show was smart to the point of genius. Every ice show needs a waltz number, and who could hope to rival the featherweight young Maxsons of "Ice Follies" fame? So "Ice-Capades" looked around and found the couple said to have originated ballroom dancing on ice about 30 years ago. They are Orrin Markhus, fat and 51, and his partner, Irma Thomas, 44 and not fat at all. Mr. Markhus is very fat indeed and he wears an ice cream suit with tails. He waltzes like a dream. The two of them drift about that icy floor with what I would like to describe as an impermanent solidity, or even a solid impermanence, except that I'm pretty sure there isn't such a thing. One thing they certainly are is more fun than a picnic, and "Shine On, Harvest Moon" is the one tune in the world to match their skating.

High among the others are Donna Atwood and Vera Hruba, the one a Kansas girl, all speed, fire, and gaiety, who goes into a turn so fast it becomes a flying top spin, the other a slim, blonde Czech with a ballerina quality to the turn of her head and the dancer's way she moves into an arabesque. Donna looks like a coming Evelyn Chandler for brilliant acrobatics, and she has a volatile quality that makes you afraid you will miss something if you don't watch her.

Dench and Stewart are dancers on ice who know the value of the long smooth line and the exquisite precision of tango timing. Al Surette's "Golliwog" is another stellar example of skill so simplified it looks easy.

Most of the production numbers are attractive, tho I could do without the elongated "Gypsy Rhapsody." The first act finale is an ornamental version of the "Coppelia" story, with Offenbach music, and with dialog spoken by unseen actors who must be refugees from "The Student Prince" and "Blossom Time," considering the palsy style of character declamation. Unhampered by dialog, and very gay, is what starts out to be a gorgeously costumed minuet, but ends up as a display piece for small "Chuckie" Stein, who as train bearer to a Mozartean lady has to cope with the comic possibilities of circumference.

The finale, of course, is a design for victory, but after a few Beethoven Fifth commonplaces of dots and dashes that suggest the outmoded mechanized ballet, it turns out to be exceptionally attractive and even a little distinguished. Looking at the final tableau it is possible to sing "The Star Spangled Banner" in the style to which it deserves to become accustomed.

NEW "CARMEN" SINGS HERE

Chicago sees a new and blonde "Carmen" next Saturday afternoon when Lily Djanel sings the title role in the Metropolitan Opera's production of Bizet's opera at the Civic Opera house. Miss Djanel is a Belgian, once chosen by Richard Strauss to sing his "Salome" at an international festival. Better known in Europe than in America, she fled from Brussels just before the Nazi occupation.

Harris Fifth Symphony Given Premiere Feb. 27

Roy Harris has dedicated his new "Fifth Symphony" to the U. S. S. R. as a tribute to its "strength in war, stanch idealism for world peace, ability to cope with stark materialistic problems of world order without losing a passionate belief in the fundamental importance of the arts." Serge Koussevitzky conducted the première Feb. 27 in honor of the 25th anniversary of the founding of the Red army.

Frank Fay Abandons Idea for All Star Production

Frank Fay, who had considered getting together an all-star vaudeville show of the "Priorities" type, has abandoned the idea. He says that the ceiling on wages will keep him from getting the big names he wanted. In addition to himself, he had hoped to employ Adolphe Menjou and Lupe Velez.

Current Music News

Edward Collins.

Edward Collins, well known Chicago pianist, composer and teacher, will appear with the Chicago Symphony orchestra at Orchestra hall Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, introducing his Concerto for Piano, No. 3, B minor, under the direction of Hans Lange. Mr. Collins has made three previous appearances with the orchestra, the first of them 18 years ago. His compositions in the répertory include a Concerto for Piano, E-flat major, a Concert Piece for Piano and Orchestra, "Mardi Gras," and "A Tragic Overture."

The latter work, written when Mr. Collins returned from service as interpreter and bandmaster in World War I., was revived last season as what the composer called a consolation prize. The late Frederick Stock had commissioned a new piano concerto, but Mr. Collins became seriously ill and was unable to complete it. He had only the intermezzo ready. Later, at Fish Creek, he wrote the nocturne and tarantella rondo, and recently completed the first movement, of elegiac character, which he says might well bear the legend, in memoriam. There is no dedication, but Chicago will know what he had in mind.

The idiom of the concerto is fairly modern, according to its composer, who adds that it has a great deal of melody, is not cyclic, and has no dissonance for the sake of dissonance. The intermezzo, he says, is not "prayerful," while the nocturne is full of the querulous sounds of night, ending with a duet between piano and cello, and the tarantella rondo has a touch of boogie woogie and the tango.

Griff Williams Returns to Empire Room Thursday

New Springtime Revue Being Prepared by Merriel Abbott

By Will Davidson.

Thursday night's the night Griff Williams comes back to the Empire room of the Palmer House. His 11 week tour of the south and midwest has been a succession of record breaking engagements, and he's heading into what should be a long run record at the Palmer House, since his booking is for the duration.

Griff will have a new singing drummer, I understand—Harvey Crawford, who was with Art Kassel so long. Harvey will replace wonderful Walt King, the gifted zanie who is now in the army. There may be a new girl singer, too. Betty Jane Watson has been singing with Griff on the road.

The spring time revue being prepared by Merriel Abbott includes Bob Williams and his dog, Red Dust; Claire Musser, xylophonist known for his spectacular work in a Tribune music festival; Bernard West, monologist, and Cabot and Dresden, dance team. The Abbott girls will have two new production numbers, one featuring tiny xylophones. Whether this show will enable Griff to match Hildegarde's tremendous drawing power is a question.

Hildy is winding up her stay here with some splendid war work, as witness that three million dollar show she did a week or so ago. And I've always admired her ability to entertain the boys, so I can't resist printing the following—even tho its author seems to have a passion for anonymity:

Hildegarde.

[In her defense—after reading your column in the SUNDAY TRIBUNE, last.] [Note: March 7.]

Keep on singing, Hildegarde, each precocious ditty,
Deserves the praise we give with such affable éclat,
As that which greets your presence in the Windy city,
And charms the service men in Iceland and in Africa.
You are an artist—you have touched more hearts than Any opera prima donna has with her high C,
You charm the bus boy and the mighty captain
With your soft-spoken voice and equanimity.
You have—we the people—in your favor,
Tho we are a gullible and an ingenuous race;
If you milk the crowd for laughs with your behavior,
Davidson does likewise in his column in the press.
Give us the chance, Hildegarde, to laugh and to praise,
One who alters the dreariness of our war-filled days.
—Hildegarde's Champion.

There you are, Hildy. And good luck.

The Bismarck continues the very likable quality of its floor shows with the present little revue. It is Art Kassel's last for a while, a short while, as he leaves after April 8 for a tour that will keep him out of the Walnut room until summer. Jimmy Joy comes back on the 9th, with a show starring Talia Wermuth.

The current revue is admirably well balanced. Artini and Consuelo are exceptionally smooth and unusual dancers, with a flair for making their formal routines seem delightfully informal with no diminution of technical excellence. Their satires are delicious—particularly that Apache thing—and their ad lib rhumbas and sambas are excellent.

Tung Pin Soo, the magician, is a deft manipulator with a special talent for making doves appear where none were seen before. He might be an excellent addition at the peace conference table. Sam Lesner beat me to the wonderful crack about "no slip of the Tung." I think I'll Soo.

Gloria Lee's dancing girls are as pictorial as ever in a wide variety of numbers, and Art's band furnishes its usual fun and good music.

ACCORDIONIST

Long a favorite at Teddy's L'Aiglon restaurant, Isobel DeMarco continues to play her accordion there nightly.

Notes of Music and Musicians

Ballet theater is trimming itself up considerably for the New York spring engagement of 29 performances to be danced at the Metropolitan Opera house between April 1 and May 2, with time out for other bookings. Antony Tudor's "Romeo and Juliet" will have its première April 6, and the repertory also holds his "Dark Elegies" and "Judgment of Paris" as well as "Pillar of Fire." Vera Zorina has been called in to bolster the box office appeal of "Helen of Troy" [Baronova is billed, but may be too ill to appear], and also will dance with Eglevsky in a revival of Balanchine's "Apollon Musagète," to be known as "Apollo." This has a Stravinsky score and belongs to the late Diaghileff period. Stravinsky himself will be on hand to conduct "Petrouchka," in which Adolf Bolm will dance the Blackamoor for the first time in about 20 years. Argentinita will appear with Massine in their collaboration, "Capriccio Espagnol," and Agnes de Mille will dance in her satirical parable, "Three Virgins and a Devil."

The two week engagement of Metropolitan Opera, opening tomorrow evening at the Civic Opera house, coincides with the publication of two new books featuring the stories of operas. "Stories from the Great Metropolitan Operas," by Helen Dike, with illustrations by Gustaf Tenggren, has a foreword by Edward Johnson, general manager of the Metropolitan, and it includes running stories with dialog and musical quotations from 25 standard operas. Sponsored by the Metropolitan Opera Guild, Inc., it lists 10 of the 13 operas to be sung in Chicago [Random House, $1]. The other book is Ernest Newman's "Stories of Famous Operas" [Alfred A. Knopf, $4], and is a companion piece to his earlier volume, "Stories of the Great Operas." This is a treasure house of authoritative information on what you might call the "luxury" operas. Typical of its completeness is a discussion of the original "Boris Godunoff" of Moussorgsky and the Rimsky-Korsakoff version almost invariably sung in this country.

Olive June Lacy, soprano, will appear tonight at Orchestra hall with the Chicago Sunday Evening club choir, under the direction of Edgar Nelson.

The Chicago conservatory continues its scholarship fund concerts with a performance at Curtiss hall Wednesday at 8:15. A Schumann program offers the Piano Quintet and the "Dichterliebe" cycle sung by Michael Stewart, basso.

Down at Camp Rucker, Ala., the 81st infantry division has a song written in its honor by Corp. Emery Heim, called "The Fighting Wildcat March," as if there ever was a peaceful wildcat. Laszlo Halasz has included it in the repertory of his American Symphony orchestra, now engaged exclusively in U. S. O. concerts.

The Adult Education council, which has had 17,500 subscribers in seven seasons of Musical Arts Piano series recitals, announces that current subscribers have until April 20 to retain their preferred seat locations at Orchestra hall. The eighth series will offer six concerts, featuring the following pianists: Robert Casadesus, Nov. 2; Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, duo pianists, Dec. 7; Carol Silver, contest winner, Jan. 4; Josef Hofmann, Feb. 1; John Kirkpatrick, who will present an all American program, March 7, and Guiomar Novaës, March 21.

Two Books 'Must Reading' for Those Who Demand the Truth

"THEY CALL IT PACIFIC: an Eye-Witness Story of Our War Against Japan from Bataan to the Solomons," by Clark Lee. [Viking Press, $3.]

"SOUTHWEST PASSAGE: the Yanks in the Pacific," by John Lardner. [Lippincott, $3.]

Reviewed by Philo M. Buck Jr.

"Tell the truth back home about the Pacific." This was the cry that went up everywhere from the first American soldiers from the Philippines to Guadalcanal. Why was the disorganization so complete after Pearl Harbor? Why were the first weeks of the marines' occupation at Guadalcanal so tragically unsupported? These books hazard the answer.

"The Pearl Harbor attack was a psychological blow to many of our admirals. They had put their faith in those 'elephants,' the battleships. Stripped of their battleships, they were as lost as a man suddenly deprived of his trousers in the middle of Fifth avenue."

It is given us now to wonder. Later, perhaps, we shall know. Why was air aid not sent to the Philippines? Why were the first defenders of Henderson field left so open to Japanese attack?

Both of these books are personal stories of the association of journalists with American action in the Pacific. Mr. Lardner's story is of the first American expeditionary force to Australia and tells of New Guinea and the battle of the Coral sea. Mr. Lee had a long training with the Associated Press in the politics and wars of the orient, in Japan and China. His story is the richer and carries the weight of a trained judgment.

Mr. Lardner is more inclined to write in the manner of a lively impressionist at a critical sport's event. Our naval and land war in the Pacific can be thought of as the greatest sports event of history.

Similar complaints that came from England. "With our plane you can make one pass at the Zero. If you miss, get the hell out of there." This fault, we trust, has been remedied. The bomber was different. For a long time there was a degree of friction between the services. This was one of the causes of Pearl Harbor.

Why was Wake Island abandoned? But—and here there is a note of optimism—the battle of Midway Island was a perfectly planned and executed action. There the cooperation between army, navy, and marines left nothing to be desired. It and the battle of the Coral sea were something more than critical incidents in the war for the Pacific. Their repercussion was felt half way round the world. It was because of them that Japan failed to launch an invasion of India.

HEADQUARTERS
UNITED STATES ARMY FORCES IN THE FAR EAST
OFFICE OF THE COMMANDING GENERAL
MANILA, P. I.

February 22, 1942

To whom it may concern:

This will identify Mr. Clark Lee. Mr. Lee is a representative of the Associated Press and has been accredited by this Headquarters.

He is now travelling on a special mission with military approval. All military organizations are directed to render every assistance to aid him to his destination.

Douglas MacArthur
Commanding General.

The only protection Clark Lee had on his journey from Corregidor to Australia, thru waters controled by the Japanese, was this letter, signed by Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

His book is good reading. Mr. Lee's excellent assessment of the first year of the Japanese war will rouse indignation among thoughtful readers. Why was America so remiss? Are we learning by our mistakes? Is his judgment going to be the verdict of history?

Some of the faults were unavoidable. There was the common complaint that our early pursuit and fighter planes were not a match for the Japanese. One remembers simi-

Clark Lee, whose "They Call It Pacific," was published last week by Viking. It is a story of 40,000 miles of front line reporting for the Associated Press.

Mr. Lee's book makes clear the meticulous care with which Japan prepared for the war; how perfectly she planned her strategy and how clearly she marked each objective. "From the technical point of view the really amazing feature of Japan's campaigns was the thoroness and perfection of their preparations. They worked out their logistics problem, the problem of supply perfectly. . . . The planning was remarkable.

"The Japanese won partly because they planned well and struck boldly and fearlessly. Mostly they won because of the slowness of the United States and our failure to send more than token forces to the far east. While they were fighting on many fronts in the first months of 1942 . . . they were wide open to attack at a score of points. Planes alone could have held the Philippines, Singapore, Hongkong, Wake Island, and the Aleutians."

This is a sweeping statement. But did the United States then have the planes and the pilots? Were we sending planes to Europe instead? The collapse of Russia and the middle east would undoubtedly have been a greater disaster.

Be this as it may. Clark Lee's book is one that every thoughtful American should read. Above all, it should be read by those in authority who are planning the strategy of 1943 and after.

Study of Spain's Politics Indicts Franco Regime

"APPEASEMENT'S CHILD: The Franco Régime in Spain," by Thomas J. Hamilton. [Knopf, $3.]

Reviewed by Dr. Melchior Palyi.

After careful scrutiny of the available evidence, Mr. Hamilton—a liberal himself—offers a picture of Spanish "politics" which shows that for a decade Republicans and Fascists were competing with one another in nonsensical cruelty and barbarism. This is characteristic of the impartial objectivity of his book, and raises it at once to the front line of the war time literature of European problems.

The author is a student of history, and a serious one, who combines the spirit of scientific inquiry with the vivid and penetrating approach of the experienced newspaper man. The more objective his approach, the more convincing is his indictments of the Franco régime. The senseless violence, the empty oratory, the lack of constructive ideas, and the devastating stupidity in social and economic matters which that régime has displayed, all add up to economic anarchy with "neither guns nor butter," with special privileges and black markets for a few, and undernourishment and hopelessness for the many as the result.

Mr. Hamilton's strength is the fine and precise analysis of political factors. Spanish internal politics is the most complicated in the world. It is deeply influenced by ideologies of every color, from obsolete medievalism to equally obnoxious modern types, from imperialistic dreams to radical social reforms. Here is an entire nation bleeding itself to death as a laboratory for the rehearsing of wild and confused Utopias.

Not less interesting is the light Mr. Hamilton throws on Franco Spain's international policies and the recent left handed attempts of the democracies to "appease" it. He is a little too pessimistic about the final outcome. Watching diplomats at their worst, one is inclined to expect catastrophic results. Fortunately, the "natural" course of things—including the lack of food and munitions—corrects much that state departments and foreign offices might have spoiled. The rôle of Spain in the present war has been, and continues to be, far more favorable [from our point of view] than this most instructive story of its backgrounds would intimate.

Melodrama at Its Best —Kaufman

"PERILOUS JOURNEY," by C. M. Sublette and Harry Harrison Kroll. [Bobbs-Merrill, $2.75.]

Reviewed by Kenneth C. Kaufman.

The Ohio and the Mississippi bred a rough, tough race of men back in the days when stout muscle and stout hearts had not yet been replaced by steam, when the gangling young republic was so full of lusty life that it spilled over the mountains, down the rivers, and across the plains in restless search of adventure, excitement, free land, and more life. Men had to be tough; as has been said of a later migration, the cowards never started and the weaklings died on the way.

Jim Dalrymple was one of the tough ones; son of a father who had deserted the refinements of civilization to live with Indians and to outsmart them at their own game, the tiresome round of life on an Indiana river bottom farm palled on him. So he loaded a flatboat with furs, meat, ginseng, and other produce and started for the roaring southern cities. He might make a young fortune out of the venture, or he might lose his boat and his life. He had a further incentive than profit and adventure, for his father had mysteriously disappeared downriver a year or two before and he felt in honor bound to try to find him.

Jim's journey had every thrill that nature, history, and legend have endowed the great inland rivers with. He was robbed and nearly killed by the pirates of Cavein Rock, but he recovered his boat and went on. He gathered a crew of one he-man of the stripe of Mike Fink, King of the Keelboatmen, and one very feminine stowaway who had everything including a mysterious past and, as it turned out, aristocratic Creole ancestry. He had fights and storms, glimpses of the strange religious frenzies of backwoods America, other glimpses of exotic European exiles [John James Audubon is dragged into the story by the heels, so to speak, and for no very good reason], a taste of the amoral, gay life of New Orleans in her widest open days, a run-in with a rascally lawyer, self-appointed ward of the beautiful stowaway, and more than enough shooting along the Natchez Trace to Nashville. The debonaire John Murrell himself deigned to undertake the slitting of Jim's throat and those of his party.

But all things belong to the brave and strong and goodlooking. So Jim won thru, foiled the outlaws, won his beauteous bride, and found his father, whose disappearance was all a matter of clearing up a cloud on his good name.

It is a melodrama, but very good melodrama. The historical and legendary background are duly respected and the natural setting used for all it is worth; and it is worth a great deal to any good teller of tales. C. M. Sublette, a successful writer of stories for older boys, had plotted the novel and written perhaps half of it when his work was interrupted by death. Harry Harrison Kroll, who has done a number of fine stories of the lower Mississippi country, finished the job. It is a remarkable piece of collaboration, as successful as it is unusual.

Old England as Viewed by Mrs. Banning

"LETTERS FROM ENGLAND: SUMMER, 1942," by Margaret Culkin Banning [Harper, $2.50].

Reviewed by James Gray.

The "people's war" has been, thus far in England, a woman's war in just and honorable proportion to the numerical strength of what Victorians called "the sex." Women in the defense services, women in munitions plants, women playing all kinds of rôles, from that of executive to that of truck driver, have made a contribution about which no one would dare to be patronizing for fear of having that very significant help removed. Think how disastrous a woman's strike could be!

There is, of course, no possibility of that. When France fell and England, in the words of the cartoonist, Low, said: "Very well, then! Alone!" Women rose as spontaneously to the emergency as they have always done in the defense of their families. It is a fine, enheartening story, one which cannot be reviewed too often.

America could have sent no more appropriate observer of English women at war than Margaret Culkin Banning. Mrs. Banning is the American woman's favorite interpreter, in fiction form, of the problems and pleasantness of domestic life in our own country. She has always been also a stanch advocate of equal opportunities for women in the fields of education, industry, the arts, and government. As a feminist who has never lost her femininity she is a highly suitable special envoy.

Of the film called "Mrs. Miniver" the complaint has been made that it represented the war in England exclusively from the point of view of the Vogue or House and Garden set. Mrs. Banning obviously went to get a better rounded picture. She visited the WAAFS and the WRNS; she inspected the girls of the land army; she went thru the barracks of the women in the munitions plants. She saw, operating a tractor, a hearty ingénue who said that she didn't care how long the war lasted, as long as she could go on doing work that suited her so well. In one of the factories there was a Brunhild of industry who moved her great arms as tho they were part of the machine. In the Midlands she talked to workers as vehement and engaging and all-out as Gracie Fields.

But she did not neglect the other England and she found it, too, greatly changed. At Cliveden Lady Nancy Astor, still looking, at 60, like a period glamor girl, seemed to have discarded whatever influence the so-called Cliveden set once had upon her. She was surrounded by strong minded women of the Labor party who talked a week-end thru about needed improvements in nurseries for the children of women in war work. Mrs. Banning talked also to Sir Stafford Cripps, finding him impressive, even if lacking in the kind of personal warmth that inspires disciples. She found his judgments persuasive. Indeed it may shock some of her friends to discover how completely she has accepted the opinion of English liberals, such as Harold Laski and Phyllis Bentley [to both of whom she also talked], that there can be no return to pre-war conditions. Mrs. Banning saw the status quo antebellum lying in the rubble of bombed London.

Her book is written with informal dash, in the form of letters to a daughter at home. They contain many casual references to such lighter matters as how good English housewives are managing to make their tables attractive despite rationing and how even the busiest of WRNS persists in making herself personally attractive by the judicious application of mascara and lipstick.

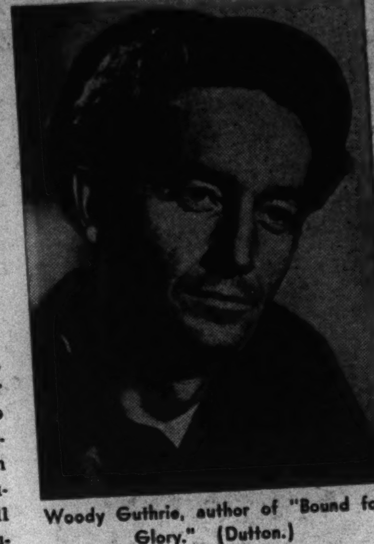
Mrs. Banning does not belabor her moral that a busy England, an England dedicated to a great task, is a happier England, too. But she presents an appealing picture of persons who are too concerned with great and hopeful prospects to be concerned over petty ones. This study of workers is in such brilliant contrast to the studies, say, of Dickens that one cannot resist the gleeful retort: "So, you can change human nature, after all."

Not that the author is completely satisfied. Women still are not paid the same wages as men get for the same work. But a start has been made.

In 1938 an American born friend, now married and living in England, wrote at the bottom of a Christmas card: "And when do you expect the end of our civilization?" Today that woman is too busy, working as a physician in a frequently bombed coastal town, to worry about the negative aspects of a job which, she sees, is hers to do. "It all depends on me" is the slogan that Mrs. Banning brings back to Americans from England.



Woody Guthrie, author of "Bound for Glory." (Dutton.)

This Dust Bowl Troubador Sings a Throaty Song

"BOUND FOR GLORY," by Woody Guthrie. [Dutton, $3.]

Woody Guthrie's voice has been heard by thousands—in the hobo jungles of boom oil towns, along frog ridden water fronts, over the air, and in massive Madison Square Garden. His folk songs of the common people are preserved on records, in private homes, and in the vaults of the Library of Congress. It is the voice of America—the rugged, fighting, playing America that lives in every stratum of life.

Now Woody Guthrie's voice is recorded again—miraculously, it seems, by the pen. "Bound for Glory" is more than excellent literature. It is the throaty song of a dust bowl troubador, singing of the people he knew, the places he saw, the struggles he had, the hope and the faith that glow in his roaming heart. This is both autobiography and biography. In telling his own story, from skull cracking childhood days in an oil town to New York's Rainbow Room and to Pearl Harbor, he is telling also the stories of every one he meets—be he bindlestiff or big shot.

Guthrie writes in the idiom, more realistically and less obtrusively so than most authors. What he has to say as he shuffles along the road, or rides a rattling freight, or sinks his cracked knuckles into the face of a man he doesn't want to fight is not always pleasant. But it is said because it happened, not just because it will make startling reading.

Woody Guthrie may not prove to be a new giant in the literary field. This may be his one book. It is so powerful, so moving, so ruggedly beautiful, so honest, so complete that if it has no worthy successors it will be a splendid monument, a rich, human gift to have offered the reading world. W. D.

Ship Surgeon Reveals How He Practices

"SHIP'S DOCTOR," by Rufus W. Hooker. [Whittlesley House, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Delbert W. Hamilton.

Here is an informal and engaging autobiography of a ship's doctor who has traveled a million miles in 14 years of sea duty and is now serving on an American transport.

A ship's doctor, usually known as a ship's surgeon, must be a medical jack of all trades, as Dr. Hooker discovered on his first trip. He must serve as his own pharmacist, fill in as dentist, administer to sick animals, diagnose rare tropical diseases, handle violent mental cases, and answer a "medico," which is an SOS from a ship in need of medical help. In short, he must be able to take care of everything from a third degree sunburn to "Ningpo varnish," which is a curious dermatitis caused by the varnish used on mah-jongg sets made in Ningpo.

Contrary to the belief of most passengers, complete medical service is not provided free of charge. A surgeon's salary covers only the medical care of the crew, and of passengers when the company is responsible for their illness. He is authorized to charge customary fees for other services.

Dr. Hooker made his first voyage as a sort of vacation with pay, with no idea of following a medical career at sea. But after returning from this trip his practice at Memphis seemed tame in comparison to the ocean adventure and he finally decided to try sea doctoring as a career.

His story is packed with rich and entertaining incidents. There is the case of the mental deportee who had an obsession for the number three, and rattled off endless monologues about "trimotored planes flying across three continents to form a triple alliance." Dr. Hooker, who found it wise to humor mental cases in every possible way, allowed him to send imaginary telegrams "in triplicate."

In a chapter called "Veterinary of Noah's Ark" Dr. Hooker writes of the many animals he has treated. Seafaring cats, the best loved of sailor's pets, were his most frequent animal patients. One of these was "Minnie the Moocher," a sleek Maltese who knew her way around in every port. Minnie sailed with Dr. Hooker's ship from London to Sidney, where she disappeared. Later she turned up in Shanghai, traveling with them to Bombay. Hooker last saw the cat in Panama.

The book is unpretentious and easy going. It is a happy combination of entertaining and informative writing.

Best of Maugham in Single Volume

"THE SOMERSET MAUGHAM SAMPLER." [Garden City, $2.49.]

Here, in a single, compact volume, is the quintessence of Somerset Maugham's published works, edited by Jerome Weidman with the idea, we assume, that if you like the way this tastes, you'll ferret around and dig up more for yourself.

No Maugham addict can disagree with Mr. Weidman's selections [none of them abridged], for they include the short novel, "Cakes and Ale," the play, "The Circle," a chapter or two from "The Gentleman in the Parlor," excerpts from "The Summing Up," and several of his best short stories, including, of course, "Rain."

There may be some who find Maugham tedious. The ultra-modern school may deride his flowing, calm style, the middle class British society which he usually depicts, his occasional platitudes. But few can dispute the fact that Maugham is a masterly teller of tales. This is a nice volume to have and occasionally dip into. M. W.

Guidebooks for Those Planning Victory Gardens

getting and maintaining a farm. Each of the chapters is summarized by a list of do's and don'ts which epitomizes real knowledge that can be gained from many years of experience. I quote here at random a sampling from this list: "Don't buy a farm just because it has a lot of buildings thrown in." "Remember that land values are based on a few easily discernible factors." "Work toward the one man plant." "A total of 1,500 to 2,000 laying hens for most efficient results."

Whoever ventures into food gardening or farming will find many abiding pleasures. There is nothing quite like the delicious flavor of fresh vegetables as they come directly from the soil to the table. Health giving qualities of fresh vegetables are proverbial. In addition to the sensuous delights of taste and the healthfulness of the food, there is the profound satisfaction of doing a job whose standards cannot be violated. Nature is a master which must be met with performance; half measures will never do. In return, nature in its infinite variety repays with many real joys.

"This Green World," by Rutherferd Platt [Dodd, Mead, $3.75], is a beautiful account of the treasures which await those who work at nature's tasks. Platt opens the world of color in vegetation, the ingenious methods which nature has of insuring reproduction, and mysteries of plant physiology. This work should not be missed.

Bonapartes Come to Life in New Novel

Bonapartes have left the Corsican for the European stage and become actors in great events that require more detailed treatment than the structure permits.

The second flaw is one of meaning or value. It would seem that a novel about Napoleon, written, as the blurb informs us, "while some of the noisier phases of the Battle of Britain were manifesting themselves overhead," ought to do more than sentimentalize him as the eternally stanch willed soldier boy saying good-by to the eternally proud, suffering, loyal mother.

It ought to do more, also, than to accept him at his own romantic evaluation as the stabilizer of the revolution, the people's king, the guarantor of the rights of man. He need not be made Hitler's precursor, but he ought to be viewed and judged in terms of an ethics more profoundly aware of the abysmal evil in every incarnation of the will to power, no matter what its slogans and its banners or how picturesque and genuinely patrician its family origins.

A Stimulating Novel of Ideas About Europe

"NEVER CALL RETREAT," by Joseph Freeman. [Farrar & Rinehart, $3.]

Reviewed by Arno L. Bader.

"Never Call Retreat" is a timely novel of ideas. Reduced to its simplest form, it is the story of Paul Schuman, a Viennese professor of history, who fights in the first World war, witnesses the Nazi anschluss in Austria, and after three years in a concentration camp escapes to America. But as a novel of ideas it is much more.

Mr. Freeman is a liberal and his chief character, Prof. Paul Schuman, is also a liberal. To Paul Schuman the last 30 years in Europe are one long process of disintegration. He has seen the ideals he cherishes—love, temperance, justice, reason—trampled underfoot by Austrian careerists and Nazi strongarm men. He has also seen the growth of communism in Austria, and, tho as a liberal he is sympathetic to the vision of the new free world, he finds Communist party organization almost as destructive to the human spirit as Nazi party organization.

Herein lies the thesis of the book: A high ideal too relentlessly pursued may in its turn become doctrinaire, perverted, and dangerous to humanity. Mr. Freeman pleads for the value of the individual, for brotherhood, for the spirit rather than the letter.

The book contains much swift and sharply delineated narrative. There are good scenes in Vienna and Paris showing Paul as the romantic schoolboy falling in love, and the last part contains some interesting chapters on America, but by far the most vivid parts are those depicting the Nazi concentration camp. Here, instead of the usual tortures and cruelty, the author emphasizes the psychological effects of the camp upon its inmates, with notable success. The dramatic clash between Hans Bayer, a Communist party leader, and Kurt Herzfeld, poet and party idealist, is well handled, and reënforces the thesis of the book. There are also stirring scenes dealing with the underground movement and the methods of communication between the prisoners and the outside world.

As a novel, "Never Call Retreat" has one weakness. Tho at times it moves dramatically and swiftly, the story and the background are not completely fused. Huge blocks of history dropped into the narrative impede its flow and make hard going for the reader. Yet the book has undeniable power. Mr. Freeman's point of view is sympathetically presented; he gives us a genuinely moving picture of the history of our times, and his ideas about that history are stimulating.

Good Morning!

Shemp Howard's wooing of Patty [an Andrews sister] and an unknown drunk's fierce and wordless battle with—he knows not who or what—drew amused laughter from the audience, which, I thought, accepted "How's About It?" as a whole, with tolerance rather than admiration.

Not that there's anything particularly wrong with this movie. . . . It's just "another Andrews Sisters picture" with a mediocre story, mediocre dancing and singing. "Here Comes the Navy" is the only song worth a ding and it isn't sung till late in the action. . . . This song, I understand, is the official theme song of the United States recruiting stations.

The romantic leads are handled by two likable players—Grace MacDonald and Robert Paige. . . . He's a song composer who finds himself served with a writ to appear in court and prove that he hasn't filched his hit song, "I Do," from a calendar poem by a lady who earns her living writing such things. . . . The process server [Shemp Howard] has hard work keeping his mind on business, because of his deep and abiding interest in a lady elevator operator [Patty Andrews]. Goaded by his love, Alf has told Patty an awful lie—i. e., that he's a buddy of Buddy Rich, and can get Patty and her sisters an audition with Rich's band. . . .

Betwixt the law suit, the promised audition, the romance, etc., are sandwiched many happenstances—all of them lively and some of them funny, if that's what you call funny.

The picture's short. Supporting players are right apt.

See you tomorrow.

Hollywood Gags Not Rationed; Neither Are Gags Upon Gags

HOLLYWOOD, Cal. (AP).—Gags are not rationed in Hollywood. Neither are gags upon gags. Ask Director Billy Wilder.

The other day, he solemnly decreed a new system on his set. He posted on the wall a sign which read:

"Before speaking to me, get the O. K. of my assistant, 'Bud' Coleman. Billy Wilder."

Wilder thought that was pretty funny. He was going to play big shot.

But half an hour later a second sign appeared under the first:

"Before speaking to me to get permission to speak to Mr. Wilder, get the O. K. of my assistant. . . ." It was signed, "'Bud' Coleman."

That started an epidemic. Before the end of the day two dozen signs were on the wall, each directing a bit of buck passing. When the line of referral got down to the studio doorman, Wilder gave in.

"O. K., boys," he announced, sadly. "I'll talk!"

This Town Called Hollywood

By Philip Scheuer

They'll get to Hades last. Then they can really give it the attention it deserves.

Ernst Lubitsch.

The "they" compose the 20th Century-Fox unit filming "Heaven Can Wait." The fact that the old master, Ernst Lubitsch, is producing and directing suggests a comedy; and that's what "Heaven Can Wait" is—Hades or no. Altho studio technicians stoutly aver they have never been there and have little intention of going, they will duplicate the reception room of hell, and maybe a couple of roaring furnaces, from such first hand information as is obtainable in Hollywood.

It will be the closest Fox has come to purgatory since 1935, when Sol Wurtzel put everybody on the hot spot with "Dante's Inferno." After he heard what people thought of the picture, I remember, Mr. Wurtzel trotted over and squatted beside us. This was the second time we had all been thru Hades together; the first was when the same Mr. W. herded us into the same "Dante's Inferno" in 1924. That one was silent, but just as enervating.

"Heaven Can Wait" is vaguely derived "from the Hungarian"—a stage play, "Birthday," by Laislas Bus-Fekete. As usual, Lubitsch practically wrote the script with, as usual, Samson Raphaelson. It sound provocative. The story begins in the reception room of that place. Don Ameche, otherwise Henry Van Cleve, is waiting to see the head man. He wants to be admitted to the inner portals. But there is a hitch somewhere. The management has never heard of him. What crimes has he committed?

Van Cleve, who is a dapper gent of 70 summers, retorts that he hasn't committed any, specifically. Rather, his life has been "one continuous misdemeanor." Indeed, he adds modestly, he suspects that he might have given the original Casanova a run for his money, or whatever it was that Casanova ran after.

The majordomo of Hades is impressed.

"Tell me about it," he urges.

Van Cleve then launches into the story of his past—all of it, from his birth in 1872 to his death in 1942. Most of it was spent in the wicked city of New York. It is Lubitsch's scheme to dog Van Cleve's dallying footsteps from the cradle to the grave, illustrating, much like Shakespeare before him, the seven stages of man: The infant, the adolescent, the lover, the husband, the father, the widower and, finally, his passing.

The picture, which is Lubitsch's first in technicolor, will be a nostalgic panorama of what he calls "an age that has vanished, when it was possible to live for the charm of living." He is particularly happy about creating it in color, for the garish and rococo Victorian era is one which he says lends itself particularly to the process—itself, as he puts it, "slightly off, like the colors themselves." Gazing around the overstuffed Fifth avenue mansion in which we were standing, I could see what he meant.

Lubitsch has selected what at first glance might appear to be a most unlikely cast for him: Ameche, for one, in the lead, and Gene Tierney opposite. But he maintains, like the announcer on the radio, that they were the best by actual test. Among the others are Signe Hasso, a French maid who entered—and disrupted!—the establishment when Henry Van Cleve was a mere 15 [Dickie Moore], Helene Reynolds, Louis Calhern [father], Spring Byington [mother], and Charles Coburn as grandfather. Henry finds his stanchest supporter in grandfather, who admires Henry for doing the things he lacked the gumption for.

As a matter of fact, what Lubitsch intends to argue is that Henry was simply "15 years ahead of his time, all the time," and that what seemed like a misdemeanor in 1915 was a convention by 1930.

So now you begin to appreciate the possibilities of "Heaven Can Wait." The headman of Hades has his ideas, too, of course; but what they are Lubitsch wouldn't reveal.

"Wait and see," he chuckled.

AT APOLLO

Laraine Day and Margaret O'Brien are seen thus in "Journey for Margaret," now showing on the Apollo screen. Robert Young plays the male lead. Prominently featured are Fay Bainter and Nigel Bruce.

De Mille, Pioneer Airman, Never Made Plane Movie

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Producer Cecil B. De Mille, who in 1917 organized one of the first American air lines to carry passengers on regular scheduled flights, later became a pilot himself and has had two air fields named after him. But he has never made an airplane picture in the 30 years he has been in pictures.

THE LITERARY SPOTLIGHT

by Fanny Butcher

THE seven days between March 17 and March 23 will be starred—golden and blue—in the literary calendar as the week when more epic records of American courage became a part of the literature of man's nobility than in any previous short period in American publishing history . . . books destined to stir not only the minds of readers but their very souls.

To civilians books are stimulation—to thought and to courage—as well as a relaxation. To men and women in service they are the same thing—a relaxation and a stimulation. Books are one of the few experiences that both can share.

In a very real way, books are a life line between us all—civilians and our fighting men. To those of us who must stay at home, some books can tell us what our sons and brothers and husbands and sweethearts cannot tell us. To men and women in uniform they can re-create home in the microcosm of the printed page. This week's spectacular output, however, is no re-creation of home but a panorama of the kind of courage, initiative, and strength which proves the American home the best in the world.

Epic Story of 21 Days at Sea.

There is the epic story of Eddie Rickenbacker's 21 days at sea in a pneumatic raft and of the heroic six who with him lived thru those three weeks of horror, those 504 hours of slowly ebbing strength, and of the one for whom the 14th day never dawned. Seven lived, two to tell the tale. And that tale, as told by Rickenbacker in "Seven Came Through," and by Lt. James Whittaker in "We Thought We Heard the Angels Sing," fills two of the year's most thrilling books.

Eddie Rickenbacker's is a straightforward, unemotional record of the events and gives the reader a noble sense of how a true man who feels his responsibility to his fellowmen can keep life in them if, as he wryly says, only "for the sheer pleasure of burying me at sea." Lt. Whittaker's is an epic of "the greatest adventure any man can have, that in which he finds his God."

An Unforgettable Experience.

In Capt. Rickenbacker's book there is inexhaustible faith in eventual rescue, an acknowledgment of the comfort of prayer. In Lt. Whittaker's there is recorded the active miracle of man's contact with his God. "I was finding my God in those watery wastes and we were meeting as strangers," he says, and without one second of oversentimentality he makes perfectly plain why they will never be strangers again. It is an unforgettable, spiritual and emotional experience to read these two, especially together. Incidentally, the royalties and the profits from the sale of Rickenbacker's book will go to the Army Air Forces Aid society.

Lt. Whittaker's book brings up a very nice point of publishing judgment. It is really a collaboration of Lt. Whittaker and Charles Leavelle, who wrote the moving series of stories which appeared in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE and to whom Lt. Whittaker makes acknowledgment, "not only for his generous coöperation but for his actual collaboration in the writing of this book." But Mr. Leavelle's name does not appear on the title page as collaborator. My belief is that readers do not expect a pilot to be a writing man any more than they expect an ace reporter to be an air ace, and admitting on the title page that a trained newspaper man helped write the book, far from detracting from its authenticity, adds to it.

Displaying the American Spirit.

Another of the fabulous week's output, "South from Corregidor," is frankly authored by Lt. Comm. John Morrill, U. S. N., and Pete Martin, associate editor of the Saturday Evening Post. It is a stirring, vivid story of the last days of the Philippines and a miraculous escape to Australia. Shug Morrill, short for Sugar—a nickname he earned when he was at the Naval academy—was commanding officer of the mine sweeper Quail. Before he finally swept his way to safety, tho, his little ship swept forever from the skies 6 Jap dive bombers out of 50 the day Bataan fell, he helped evacuate Corregidor nurses and wounded to waiting submarines, then helped defend the undefendable rock, scuttled his mine sweeper, and finally escaped miraculously, armed with courage, humor, ingenuity, fine American spirit. Like "They Were Expendable," "South from Corregidor" makes readers proud to be of the same blood as men like Shug Morrill and just a little ashamed of themselves for not considering themselves a little more expendable.

Other books which make this week so memorable in its recording of America's fighting heroism are eyewitness reporters' accounts.

"They Call It Pacific," by Clark Lee of the Associated Press, tells what a hard working, honest, experienced reporter saw in that vast theater of war, the Pacific, from Bataan to the Solomons. Warned by the Japs to leave Shanghai, he was in time to be an eyewitness of, and testifier for, the fall of the Philippines. He got the first hand story of the Coral sea. The battle of Midway was refought for him [and for us] in first hand accounts of its victors, and he was the first correspondent to fly in combat over Guadalcanal. Everywhere he went men begged him to "tell the truth back home about the Pacific." In "They Call It Pacific" he does!

"Singapore Is Silent," by George Weller, is a stirring first hand account of the last days of Singapore, the Malayan campaign, and the heart-breaking retreat.

They Died Too Soon.

"Southwest Passage," by John Lardner, a "report to the nation of its men on the far-flung fronts of the Pacific," is by the gifted and humor knowing son of that inimitable American humorist, Ring W. Lardner, who used to wander around the hallways of THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE owl-eyed under his Anthony Eden eyelashes, almost never cracking that deadpan set to his face and solemnly declaring, if any one asked him what the "W" in his name stood for, "Worm; it's Ring Worm Lardner." That great laugh maker shouldn't have died so soon.

Nor should Stephen Vincent Benet have died last week. Forty-four is too young to die, even if into those forty-four years a man has crowded a creative life time, as did Steve Benet. As surely as if he had told me so himself, I know that Steve Benet considered himself as expendable as any boy on a mine sweeper or on a PT boat or in the cockpit of a plane like Colin Kelly's. He died with his finger on the trigger of one of the most powerful weapons in any war: the machine gun of ideas. By saving his strength he might have saved his life, but his father, his grandfather, and his great-grandfather had been soldiers and, if Steve Benet's body was no soldier's body, his heart was a soldier's heart. Stephen Vincent Benet's "John Brown's Body" will live forever. Steve's soul will go marching on.

Guide Books for Those Who Are Planning War Gardens

By Arthur C. Bergholz.

As a people united in a common cause, we have set for ourselves as part of our task the planting and harvesting of 18 million food gardens this year. The fortunate citizens who have the space and time, and those who can share coöperatively with them in this task, will not lack in guidance. The prospective gardener will find practical handbooks which will see him thru from the initial plan to the harvest and storage.

"The Vegetable Garden," by Edward I. Farrington, revised and enlarged, [Hale, Cushman, Flint, $1.25] is an excellent handbook of information. Concerned solely with vegetables, Farrington doesn't miss a trick in informing the beginner about essential details. Starting with the initial plan, the preparation of the soil, the selection of tools, he describes step by step the preparation and care of the garden. Graphic charts assemble the important facts for over-all planning and quick reference.

If the beginner wishes to try, in addition to vegetables, herbs, berries, and fruits, "The Food Garden," by Laurence and Edna Blair [Macmillan, $2], is very good. An attractive feature of this work is the 20 double page spreads of line drawings which depict the various steps in the cultivation of each crop and the particular problems which are likely to perplex the gardener. The Blairs selected 33 vegetables, 8 greens, 8 salad vegetables, 16 herbs, and 18 fruits and berries. This is a book streamlined for victory gardening, with particular emphasis upon foods high in vitamin content.

The above two are compact, handy books for the novice. Should he wish to supplement either one, "Vegetable Gardening in Color," by Daniel J. Foley [Macmillan, $2.50], is a color picture cyclopedia of vegetables, herbs, and berries. There are 150 pictures in full color. Each plant is fully discussed in a text which covers varieties, culture, insects, and diseases. In addition, there are sections on planning, preparation of the soil, seed sowing, tools, cooking hints, and winter storage.

Once started upon gardening, few beginners will be able to restrict their enthusiasm. There will be a strong desire to supplement the food garden with flowers, shrubs, and trees. "The Complete Book of Garden Magic," by Roy E. Biles [Ferguson, $3], is a superb book. Its appeal to the beginner grows steadily. The loving care with which Biles undertook this work is shown in every detail. Simple, graphic line drawings are used effectively in setting forth the steps of each procedure. A nice feature is the repetition of important facts according to context. The reader is always fully informed, and the confusing cross reference is eliminated. The beginner will be quick to recognize its merit.

For the beginner who plans to become a more expert gardener there are many specialized books. One of particular merit is "Plant Propagation," by Alfred C. Hottes [De La Mare, $2]. This work permits the amateur to multiply desirable plants. Hottes covers seeds, buds, bulbs, grafts, and cuttings.

When the urge for the land becomes more vital and the family farm is contemplated, "Farming for Security," by William B. Duryee [Whittlesey House, $2], is an excellent guide. Duryee, a former secretary of agriculture of the state of New Jersey and a successful practicing farmer, approaches with unusual good sense the problems of

Writers Tell of Suffering as Internees

"EXCHANGE SHIP," by Max Hill. [Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50.]

"ITALY FROM WITHIN," by Richard G. Massock. [Macmillan, $3.]

Reviewed by George J. Scharschug.

Here are two more books by Americans who have returned after spending months of internment in enemy countries. Both are foreign correspondents of the Associated Press—able newspapermen. They offer factual and objective texts, which not only are interesting reading but provide much that should make for a better understanding of two of the enemy nations and their leaders, which the United States is pledged to crush.

Mr. Hill, who was chief of the Tokio bureau of the AP when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, spent months in solitary confinement in a filthy prison and suffered many cruel hardships in addition to being grilled daily by his jailers.

He says he never expected to leave the prison alive. When he finally was put aboard the ship that brought him home, he learned of other Americans who had suffered even more severe treatment. The story of the torture by Japanese of these Americans is one that will make any man's blood boil, but Mr. Hill has not stopped there.

He has painted the Japanese of today as he saw them—the political leaders, the civilians, the policemen, the soldiers and the Nisei, second generation Japanese-Americans who had gone back to Japan. It is a picture of bitter hatred of these yellow men for all members of the white race and of the scheming of their war lords to make Japan dominant in all Asia and other lands in Pacific waters.

Altho Mr. Massock, who was chief of the Rome bureau of the AP, got a taste of Italy's prisons, most of his prisons, most of his days of internment were far more decent. In addition to his observations on the daily weakening of Italy's war spirit, his book is valuable at this time because it offers a fresh and up to date review of the rise and decline of Mussolini and Fascism.

Mr. Massock was in Rome in the days when Mussolini, at the height of his power, swayed his people with his flamboyant speeches and his "dynamic, theatrical personality" and he heard Mussolini, now a mere dishwasher for Hitler, deliver his declaration of war against the United States. His description of the crowd on that later day is heartening. Italians, ruled still by iron handed dictatorship made more cruel by Nazi domination, may continue to fight for a while, but their hearts are no longer in the war.

Heine's Prose.

Anne Green's New Novel of French People

"JUST BEFORE DAWN," by Anne Green. [Harper, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Paul Engle.

It's a hard age for fiction to compete with current fact. Time and again a novel about the events of the last few years will be exciting and genuine and entirely believable and completely fantastic when it is dealing with political, social or military matters. These may be well known, but they do not lose interest by being worked into a novel. Yet that same book may be unconvincing and strained when it deals with people—merely with the men and women who submitted to the enormous events of their time.

This is one of those books. The personal story of Elizabeth Elliott varies in attraction almost exactly according to whether the American girl living in Paris is shown against the dim light of her school and home and job, or against the fiery sky of Europe preparing for war and submitting to it.

The best parts are the incidental ones—the splendid description of the July 14, 1939, parade in Paris; the working class people to whom a succession of amorous nurses took the little girl when she was supposed to be having walks in the Bois—all the men and women who come into the book as supporting characters. But never Elizabeth. She seems a mindless ghost. I would guess that she is the author, who found it impossible to have toward herself that necessary objectivity she could attain in creating other characters.

There is too much flabby writing; indeed, the whole book gives the impression of having been written in great haste. Such feeble sentences, the author entering the novel and dragging after her long comments on her characters, on Paris, on the French people, are sadly abundant: "Amanda possessed the endearing gift of sympathy and was always ready to extend the loving hand, which, held out by a few in each generation, links all human beings one to the other in a living chain." And then there is the ludicrous description of the old woman, Tante Marie, who "trembled like a wrestler caught off balance." Why, on page 22, is Charles Elliott called Julian?

But there are good things, too. The sense of France is very fine: the intimate, real texture of the life, as an alert person has seen, tasted, touched, smelled, and heard it. The sergeant of reserves on the train who predicts his death in the palm of his hand; the itching little girl on the refugee train; the swarming little people.

But the big fabric of the novel doesn't measure up to them. The emotional affairs of the main characters seem trivial and unreal. It may not be the fault of the author. It may be the fault of times too overwhelming for the individual, in books or out. Perhaps a solution is the one Thomas Mann has taken in using a biblical story or remote Goethe.

Yet, even with these reservations, I can recommend the book for its accuracy of France and its knowledge of the way history came to many people who, like the bulk of Europeans, simply wanted to be left alone.

Companion Books.

John Day will publish on April 13 two companion volumes containing speeches and messages since Pearl Harbor by Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek and Mme. Chiang Kai-shek respectively. The generalissimo's volume, entitled "All We Are and All We Have," contains his important utterances bearing on the war made between Dec. 7, 1941 and Nov. 17, 1942. "We Chinese Women" is the title of the volume which contains Mme. Chiang Kai-shek's speeches and writings during the "First United Nations' Year," up to her departure for America.

Treachery in the Days of Richelieu

"THE ARM AND THE DARKNESS," by Taylor Caldwell. [Scribners, $3.]

Reviewed by Arthur Frederic Otis.

This is a strange novel to have been written in this day. Its title derives from an eastern proverb, quoted on the title page, "Three things only can reach beyond the world: The sun in its light, the darkness of night, and the long arm of God."

It is a story of the days of Richelieu, of perfumed courtiers and illicit love, of bloody swords and violent death, of siege and rape and starvation. But most of all it is a story of man's eternal struggle toward the light of freedom, of his repeated attempts to cast aside the shackles of sham and hypocrisy and mysticism.

Nobly born young Arsène du Richepin, sorely wounded by the cardinal's guards when they broke up a secret Huguenot meeting, forces his way into a miserable house in a blind alley to escape from his pursuers. An old philosopher, Francois Grandjean, and his granddaughter, Cecile, shelter the young aristocrat and nurse him thru weeks of fever.

It is Arsène's first contact with the dire poverty in which most French families of that time live, his first realization that these human beings deserve better than they are receiving at the hands of a decadent government and an unheeding church. His conscience is awakened and his life is given a purpose. His heart, too, reacts to the charm of lovely young Cecile.

Thru 600 pages the story wends its devious way, a maze of intrigue and treachery, terminating in the siege of La Rochelle, and Arsène's departure for the new world. There, he is assured by the Duchesse de Rohan as she urges him to leave, he and his children will find escape from "the pestilence and the ruin and the hopelessness of Europe."

If you can still read Dumas and Victor Hugo with relish, "The Arm and the Darkness" is for you. If you do not object to page after page of description—if you are satisfied with a microscopically thin slice of the meat of action in a huge sandwich of the unbuttered dry bread of background and philosophizing—then you will find this story good entertainment.

Taylor Caldwell is repetitious. It is as tho she feared some one would miss her first long delineation of a character; so she puts the reader thru it again the next time the same character appears.

Undoubtedly she has painted an accurate picture of France in the early 17th century. One wonders why. It has all been so well done so many times before.

"Imperative" Sign Placed on Hersey's Book

By Frederic Babcock.

Some time ago the Council on Books in Wartime designated William L. White's "They Were Expendable" as imperative reading for persons who wish to gain an understanding of what this war is all about. Now the council has given the "imperative" sign to a second book: "Into the Valley," by John Hersey.

"Into the Valley" is a straightforward account of one skirmish of the marines on Guadalcanal last October. Hersey, correspondent of a national magazine, accompanied a detachment headed by Capt. Charles Rigaud in an attempt to force a crossing of the Matanikau river. In a jungle valley thru which a brook led to the main stream, the marines ran into an ambush and, after some bitter fighting, had to withdraw. Critics have said that the correspondent's eyewitness account of what took place, of American boys on the march and in the heat of action, of what individuals said and did under fire can be compared to the work of Ernest Hemingway and Stephen Crane.

"This book," Hersey writes, "is an attempt to recapture the feelings of Rigaud, his men, and myself, when we went into that jungle valley. If people in the homes could feel those feelings for an hour, or even just know about them, I think we would be an inch or two closer to winning the war and trying like hell to make the peace permanent."

To this observer the most striking part of the book is to be found in the way the author quotes the marines. He has them talking as they really talk, rather than as some fiction writers imagine they do. For example:

"We no more'n begun to approach-fire, see, when the Japs put it right on us and we couldn't see where the hell they was at. . . . Then this grenade or mortar it hit us. . . . All white, see, it made our eyes go. And a hell of a noise like I never heard and I hope to die I never do again. Well, see, it knocked us around like a bunch of damn alley pins. . . . Geez, I never felt like this before at all, what you guess it could be from, like this? No bullets, no blood. Just around my chest it's so hard to breathe. . . . Bauer, the damn fool, I shouldn't say that, you wouldn't find a better man, he lay there hurt like the rest of us behind this mound. . . . He got up and ran right on down and he was just turning the gun right side to when another one of those big damn things came and landed right behind him. . . . You see, we could see his back was all blood and I guess he was dead. We moved back then because it doesn't rain twice but it rains three times and we knew there'd be another of those things with everybody's name on it."

"Into the Valley" was published early in February by Alfred Knopf. Until the announcement of the "imperative" award, it had sold about 8,000 copies—a good, but not exceptional, record. Now that it has the backing of the Council on Books in Wartime—an organization of publishers, booksellers, librarians, and the like—it probably will go soaring into the best seller lists. It deserves the widest possible reading.

Author Returns.

Just returned from Tobruk, Cairo, and points east is Robert George Dean, one of Scribner's detective authors, who has spent the last 14 months in Libya and the middle east with the American field service. Much of this time was spent with the British 8th army at Tobruk, El Alamein, and elsewhere. Mr. Dean's most recent books, both published after his departure for the east, are "Murder on Ice" and "Layoff."

Two Timely Books Tell of West Africa

"DAKAR: Outpost of Two Hemispheres," by Emil Lengyel. [Garden City.]

"LIGHTING UP LIBERIA," by Arthur I. Hayman and Harold Preece. [Creative Age Press, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Charles C. Colby.

In view of the rising tide of interest in West Africa, these two books should find a ready welcome. Individually or together they introduce the reader to the perplexing problems of climate, economy, religion, and government which plague this bizarre tropical coast. The first book, a reprint, deals with Dakar as the capital of French West Africa and as a point of growing strategic significance in Atlantic affairs, while the second is a study of the native people of the republic which America helped to found and to preserve.

In his volume, Emil Lengyel emphasizes the vast hinterland commanded by Dakar by means of the Trans-Saharan railroad, of which it is the port. Climate, he argues, is the condition which above all makes West Africa a poor country. "It wears out and depresses man and defeats him at the very outset." According to Lengyel, West Africa is inhabited by about 150 colored types, some of which are no more related to one another than Mexicans are to New Englanders. He shows that varying customs, languages, and social organizations as well as political boundaries make West Africa a perplexing segment of the international scene.

"Lighting Up Liberia" grew out of the experience of the senior author when he was an engineer for the Firestone Plantation company in Liberia. He has a gift for characterization and under his skilful pen Small Sam, his body servant; Taro, his amorous cook, and Martin, his skilful native overseer, become characters in a moving drama of the tropics.

The difficulties of maintaining satisfactory government in the humid tropics are illustrated by many of the incidents of Mr. Hayman's narrative. According to him the present government is in the hands of a small "aristocracy" of Americo-Liberians. The members of this group are descendants of the Negroes who had been slaves in the United States and whose freedom was purchased in order that they might help establish the Liberian republic in 1822. The authors, in bitter criticism, claim that the natives are oppressed in order to keep the present government in power. At points the argument takes on the quality of propaganda, and while the reader remains interested he is unconvinced.

Critic Enjoys Week's Grist of Mysteries

"PUT OUT THE LIGHT," by Ethel Lina White. [Harper, $2.]

Reviewed by Drexel Drake.

The reader is forewarned in a note that the murder in this story is long delayed. Whatever unfavorable prejudice that warning may produce is dispelled long before the murder takes place, almost three-quarters thru the book. Up to that point the author has commanded intense interest with a gripping, provoking, dramatically carved character study.

Anthea Vine, in her 40s, has become wealthy by her own effort. She lives magnificently, altho at the core her life is hollow, product of frustration. She has surrounded herself with satellites, helplessly dependent upon her. She builds up hope in their hearts, only to make ensuing disappointments the more poignant. She deliberately nurtures hate to match her own hate.

There is a subtly comic aspect of life in the Vine ménage, even while the clouds of tragedy thicken. Three grown adopted children, two young men and a girl, besides a young doctor and Miss Vine's overworked secretary, are the victims of Anthea's whimsical course of mental torture. Any one of them could have been expected to murder her. And it is only by a fine piecing together of clews that Inspector Pye determines who really did eventually crush Miss Vine's skull.

"ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT," by Lee Thayer. [Dodd, Mead, $2.]

Rain, fog, and an escaped convict prowling in the woods helped set the stage when Peter Clancy and his valet-chauffeur, Wiggar, lost their way in the mountain roads, driving without headlights. And while Peter and Wigga spent the night in a cabin, Trevor Collingswood was murdered while seated in his car in his nearby garage. Was Sheriff Yancey ecstatic the next morning because Peter was at hand!

Peter pitched into the case, but he didn't tell the sheriff he had had a glimpse of a beautiful girl wiping the handles of the Collingswood car. The investigation gains momentum, surprises come in fast order, and there is stirring action against mountain and canyon background. Peter delivers a solution the sheriff could not have anticipated, while a neatly conceived drama is unfolded.

Emerson West decided his weekly broadcast, "This Is Murder," needed novelty. So he hired a star cast to reënact the hundred year old unsolved Parker murder and broadcast it from the very house in which it occurred. Invited guests included Jupiter Jones, Harvard faculty member with a hobby of solving murders.

The broadcast went smoothly in the creepy environment but, during a bit of added entertainment, West was murdered in a locked bathroom, presenting an almost impossible puzzle. Jupiter solved it after a couple more murders and some shivery excitement. This story sparkles with originality and Jupiter does some magnificent sleuthing.

An assignment from the sheriff pitches Johnny Kendall, news photographer, into a complicated puzzle at the Rigmire lodge. First, Dr. Rigmire is messed up by an ax and later Cousin Joe is obliterated by a hatchet. Johnny makes it his business to prove that Babette Hazelle isn't as bad as her reputation, but he needs amazing versatility in occultism, astronomy, and psychiatry to show up the real murderer.

Johnny is thoroly likable and a joy to follow. The story has good plot, arresting characters, a wealth of background, and smart craftsmanship. Interest never pauses.

U. of C. Plan Geared to Aid Youths of Draft Age

Degrees Given at the End of Second Year

By the Rev. John Evans.

The University of Chicago's plan to grant bachelors' degrees at what is conventionally the end of the sophomore year is now under full headway despite protests and criticisms from rank and file educators of the country. The plan, geared to aid young men subject to war service call, falls in line with the wish of many men to graduate before being drafted.

This wish will be demonstrated at the university's 212th convocation next Friday, which will show a 6 per cent increase over last winter's convocation. The candidates for undergraduate degrees represent a 37 per cent increase, and include a higher proportion of men. Also a result of war acceleration, the number of medical degrees to be granted is 29, compared with five at the corresponding convocation last year.

Twenty scholarships of $300 each will be awarded to Chicago area high school sophomores and juniors who wish to win their bachelor degrees in its Chicago plan location. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the university, in announcing the scholarships, said selections will be made on the basis of examination of abilities required for successful college work. The examinations will be held April 10.

Scholarships, Mr. Hutchins said, will be awarded on the basis of personal interviews, examinations and recommendations from high school teachers and principals. The scholarships, while given only for the first year, he added, will be continued for four years if the college record is satisfactory. High school boys and girls completing the sophomore year or the first half of the junior year are eligible.

The four year college of the university, organized in 1937, begins at the level of the junior year in high school and ends with the traditional sophomore year. According to Mr. Hutchins, the curriculum provides a liberal education, basic to specialization. Last year, the faculty voted to award the bachelor's degree for completion of the Midway version of a liberal education.

The famous Bruehl collection of rare books on the prehistoric Americas now a part of the University of Cincinnati library, is there because a barge on the Ohio river ran into a mud bank in 1848. When the boat stuck, a German immigrant, Gustav Bruehl, who became a noted Cincinnati physician, decided not to go farther and settled in Cincinnati. Dr. Bruehl, in addition to the teaching and practice of medicine, made an intensive study of ancient America. He wrote several books and many articles on the American Indian, the Aztecs and Incas. The collection contains 2,000 volumes, and includes an Aztec Spanish lexicon published in 1571 in Mexico City, 69 years before the first book was printed in the British colonies, at Cambridge, Mass. About 15 are from the 16th century, 27 from the 17th and 140 from the 18th century.

BOOKS ALIVE

by Vincent Starrett

PUBLIC curiosity about authors is insatiable. The literary gossip columns are filled with the fascinating activities of writers who have published books or are about to publish books, and every publisher has his special department to take care of the demand for more information. Thus we learn that Theresa Frankenstein, author of "Secret Garden," makes waffles out of old almanacs; that Decameron Smith, who wrote "Shelley in August," can tell the time of day by merely looking at a clock; that the mystery makers, Flo and Ethelbert Homework, think up their intricate plots while lying flat on their backs in Central park. Scientists and statesmen are allowed their personal privacy; but when a popular author shaves in camel's milk, somehow his publisher gets wind of the foible and releases a bulletin marked "for immediate use."

Are the authors themselves made uncomfortable by these intimate revelations? Not at all! They love it. Indeed, in a majority of instances they furnish the copy and sometimes, I suspect, acquire new and diverting habits just to give the earnest blurb writers something to write about. Walking three times around the goldfish bowl before buckling down to a morning's work is not, as you might think, evidence of a dangerous psychosis; it is a valuable asset. Beginning the evening meal with pie and closing it with soup is a mild obliquity that may be worth a paragraph on the book page. Publicity is the key word, of course: to keep your name and fame before the public and the public will buy your books—that is the philosophy of authors; and they are right, are they not?

They Got the Publicity.

It was always so. If I have any complaint to make about our contemporary entertainers, it is that they are not imaginative enough. I look in vain thru the publicity releases for something novel and original. There were giants in the old days—ah, the good old times! At least, there was a certain genius for personal exploitation.

Gautier used to stroll about Paris wearing a red fez, a velvet jacket and yellow Turkish slippers. Gerard de Nerval led a lobster on a pale blue ribbon thru the public parks of the same literary capital. Dumas the elder wore the gaudiest uniforms he could purchase; it was difficult to pry him out of them at night. In the London of his time, Oscar Wilde wore knee breeches, silk stockings, and a flowing green tie, and carried a sunflower in his walks up Piccadilly. Disraeli was a fop. Our own Joaquin Miller, no great shakes as a poet, wore a Spanish cape and sombrero and went booted to the knee. Why not? It is perhaps the duty of everybody to be as picturesque as possible.

In our own time, only the cigar-smoking Amy Lowell seems to have had the right idea. Salute to the memory of a robust personality!

Amusement for Bookmen.

It is a pleasant duty to recommend "Of Books and Men," by Joseph J. Reilly [Julian Messner, Inc.], to all members in good standing of the immortal fellowship of books. Prof. Reilly's contribution is a quiet miscellany, spanning four centuries of literature, in which bookmen will find much to solace and amuse them. Properly understood, it is a book of adventure—the adventures of a warm human intelligence browsing among the great books and their writers. Here are the love affairs of Lamb and Hazlitt, the vagaries of De Quincey, the tribulations of Jane and Thomas Carlyle, and other matters of great delight and high consequence.

He Loved Life and Literature.

One of the happiest pieces in the collection is the author's tribute to William Lyon Phelps of Yale, his former teacher, of whom he tells some amusing stories. "My idea of perfect happiness," Phelps once told Reilly, "is to be chronically overworked at what one loves most to do"—a remark that is still a revelation of the man.

There were weak students in Phelps' classes, but if they had wit they were, in Phelps' eyes, more than half redeemed. A lazy lad once summed up his knowledge of Browning in three despairing sentences that delighted his teacher: "Browning died in 1889," said the student. "In that same year I was born. What a shameful exchange!"

But Phelps loved life as much as he loved literature; and that was the secret of his popularity at Yale. When he was once asked which he would rather do, discover a beautiful poem or see Yale defeat Harvard on the gridiron, he answered: "I never smashed my hat over a beautiful poem."

A Book Worth Looking For.

Readers who like fables—they are becoming increasingly popular in this era of new interest in China and India—have missed some of the best if they have not read the wonderful and bitter moralities of Ambrose Bierce. His "Fantastic Fables" is out of print, I think, but it is worth looking for in the second hand shops or at the libraries. My own favorite of them all is this:

An associate justice of the Supreme court was sitting by a river when a traveler approached and said:

"I wish to cross. Would it be lawful to use this boat?"

"It would," was the reply. "It is my boat."

The traveler thanked him and, pushing the boat into the water, embarked and rowed away. But the boat sank and he was drowned.

"Heartless man!" cried an indignant spectator. "Why did you not tell him that your boat had a hole in it?"

"The matter of the boat's condition," said the great jurist, "was not brought before me."

The Greatest Detective Story.

A praiseworthy new edition of "The Moonstone" has issued from the press of the Reader's Club. It is made attractive by readable type and a foreword by the late Alexander Woollcott. Woollcott stands with Dorothy Sayers, T. S. Eliot, and G. K. Chesterton in naming this masterpiece of William Wilkie Collins the greatest detective novel in the world; and, whether or not one agrees, it is an opinion with which few will wish to quarrel.

Sergeant Cuff, the pioneer fathomer of Collins' classic, is one of the immortals of his tribe. With Cuff—the professional detective who raised roses in his unprofessional moments—was born the great paradox, the detective with a sensibility greater than his sense. It is now known that certain of the sergeant's most deplorable theories—as that the heroine was the villain of the piece—were founded on those of Inspector Whicher of Scotland Yard, who was long under a cloud for his arrest of Constance Kent, in 1860, for the murder of her infant brother. Only the young lady's tardy confession was potent to clear poor Whicher's reputation.

Alexander Woollcott as he appeared a few weeks before his death. "As You Were," his anthology of American prose and poetry selected especially for service men, will be published this week by Viking.

Bonapartes Come to Life in This Historical Novel

"GOOD-BYE, MY SON," by Marjorie Coryn. [Appleton-Century, $2.75.]

Reviewed by Joe Lee Davis.

The conventional way of classifying historical novels has the merit of simplicity. One type, according to this classification, has fictitious main characters and brings in actual historical personages only as part of the background. The other uses actual historical personages for its chief characters and thus is closely akin to biography.

Marjorie Coryn, English born, California bred, began her writing career as a biographer, but has now employed materials gathered at the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris just before the war to produce a historical novel of the second type. Its chief characters are the members of the most amazing family that ever upset the peace of Europe and lastingly impressed the memory of the western world—the Bonapartes of Corsica.

They are all here, drawn to the life, from the father, Carlo, down to the youngest son, Jerome. We get to know them from the most intimate points of view—that of Napoleon's mother, Letizia Ramolino. Center of reference for the unfolding of a story that is focused inevitably on Napoleon, her personality overshadows every other, including even his.

The author, in an appended explanatory note, thus justifies the prominence she has given Letizia: "The story of the Bonapartes is the drama of the rise and fall of human power; that of Letizia, of no more importance than a record of sunshine and rain; yet hers has the wider significance, even as God's weather is of greater import to humanity than all the political storms and calms of man."

The spirit of Letizia is earth anchored, practical, bent on preservation; that of her most famous son, stamped with his liberty loving father's image, soars beyond limits, dream besotted, destined for destruction. Bound to him by her great love, she must suffer all the sorrows his rise and fall bring in their wake, knowing too well the real man, the boy grown up, behind the façade of heroism.

When the painter David, desiring to do a portrait of Napoleon when his name was just becoming a conjure word in Paris, speaks of him ecstatically as "a god of battle" and "genius of victory," Letizia replies: "My son isn't a god of anything at all. He's a thin young man with a bad complexion."

Her reactions to Josephine de Beauharnais are among the more memorable moments of the novel.

Altho "Good-Bye, My Son" has the undeniable distinction of giving Letizia the place she deserves in the Bonaparte saga, it has two main flaws. The first is its structure. The events of a vast period of time—from 1768 to 1836—are presented panoramically in episodes grouped into seven parts. The effect, despite much vivid writing, is monotonous, particularly after the

Curse of War Felt Heaviest by Little Man

"WAR IS PEOPLE," by Lornal Lindsley. [Houghton Mifflin, $2.75.]

Reviewed by Maureen Daly.

"War Is People" is not a story of the strategies and military struggles of war. It is not a story of weapons, battles, front lines, and retreats. Rather, it is an account of the small man, the artist, the factory worker, the shopkeeper, who fights, is overcome, and struggles on. It is the account of an unconquered people who drink watered wine, make small stews in big pots, smuggle weapons, act as snipers, and keep on fighting.

Lorna Lindsley was in Europe to make a motion picture in the concentration camps of France where the Spanish Republican prisoners were confined, but soon returned to Paris and formed a company to do a series of shorts of French life behind the lines. She was photographing in the streets of Paris until five days before the city fell.

In her travels she saw both the blood and the sweat of war. She saw Spanish children, pot-bellied and dry-skinned, starving in the streets of Spain; she saw streets blocked with the rock pile aftermath of air raids and smelled dust of ruined cathedrals. She rode on trains crowded with unwashed, unfed refugees and shared dry bread and greasy sausage with wounded soldiers on their way back to the Spanish front. She was in Paris when it fell to the Germans and the whole city went black with mourning, and requiem masses were offered for a dead France while the choir sang the doleful Dies Irae and cathedral bells tolled.

Most interesting, perhaps, is her account of modern Palestine, where an old people is trying to turn the soil for a new life. A new country built up from the brains, the muscles, and the talents that were exiled from prejudiced Europe. There is a new day of creation there with Jewish men and women working in planned coöperation to build towns, industries, and schools; to give Jewish children the chance denied them in the dark, crowded ghettos of other countries. It is a land well-defended and well-ruled where Jews can earn their own life and their own freedom.

"War Is People" is like an illustrated lecture giving out the human information we want about our allies, official and unofficial—smuggled man power and underground courage—with Miss Lindsley doing the commentary and slipping in the colorful verbal slides.

Immigrants Fulfill Cycle in New World

"THE WALTZ IS OVER," by Hester Pine. [Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Walter Havighurst.

In a period of war it is natural for Americans to reconsider their relationships to the Europe from which they came. Probably this is especially true of German-Americans and it is about such a family that Miss Pine has written her ambitious and not entirely successful novel. In "The Waltz Is Over" she tells the story of the Nordlander family and the problems they faced thru three generations in America.

Marta Multscher, a carefree girl enjoying the idyllic life of a village on the Danube a hundred years ago, could not even dimly have foreseen that her story book romance with Prince Klaus was to send her heavy hearted to America, where she would found a widespread and successful family. Tho they bore her husband's name, the Nordlanders were really her people. They had a love of inheritance and a loyalty to traditions; they ate the rich German food and retained the German tongue at their table while taking their places with considerable success in the economic life of America. It was not a short or simple process for them to sever the cord that linked them with the old world.

The story embraces three generations, from the ardent girlhood of Marta to another ardent girlhood, curiously like her own, of her granddaughter, Truda Warden. It is an uneven story, with long stretches of unrevealing and unaccented narrative and an overfull canvas of vaguely drawn characters. The entire middle section of the novel is blurred and uncertain.

But the story regains vitality when Truda Warden appears. She is a fit descendant of a woman who directed the energies of a divided family and achieved success with her husband's business. Truda is a credible and appealing American girl—equally real in her college years and in the pilgrimage to Europe which she makes out of an inner need.

Henry James said that the visit of an American to Europe constitutes a psychological drama. The best feature of this scattered and groping novel is the importance that is achieved with Truda's mission to the village beside the Danube that had lived so long and so freshly in her grandmother's memory. The theme of change from European to American character achieves a certain drama in her search for the vanished life of Marta Multscher a hundred years ago.

In that mission the family cycle has reached its complete turning. It leads the granddaughter to a large realization: "A Viennese waltz—that was Roddy and Uncle Gustave, and her grandmother. Gertrude felt a great kinship flow over, as the music went on, with her grandmother and all the women of her blood who had gone with their men to make homes in a new place. From Asia the stream had trickled slowly, slowly, across mountain and plateau, spread out, and populated the continent of Europe. Then, with her grandmother, it had spilled across the ocean, to populate a new land. In her the circle that her grandmother had spoken of was finished." Truda Warden is unquestionably a descendant of Marta Multscher. Yet Marta was European to her death and Truda is fully and finally American. It is that cycle which this novel was written to unfold.

Thrilling Tales of Three Weeks of Floating Hell on the Pacific

Reviewed by William Shinnick.

"WE THOUGHT WE HEARD THE ANGELS SING," by Lt. James C. Whittaker. [Dutton, $1.50.]

"SEVEN CAME THROUGH," by Capt. Edward V. Rickenbacker. [Doubleday, Doran, $1.50.]

These rather slim volumes, which complement each other, form an accurate, intimate report on one of the most remarkable journeys in all history. Whittaker and Rickenbacker were among the seven men who survived [of the eight who started] 21 days of floating hell on three little rubber rafts tossed down upon the interminable reaches of the Pacific when the plane they rode ran out of gas.

The equatorial sun burned their hides. Salt spray drenched them, chilled them at night and caused terrible sores on their bodies. At the beginning they had no drinking water and only four oranges for a food reserve. Sharks hovered about the little craft constantly, tried to bite into it, flipped the men with their tails, threatened to overturn them all by bumping the bottoms of the inadequate rafts.

Some of the passengers went balmy in their torture. The eighth man, Sergt. Alex, just out of a hospital, drank salt water in his delirium and died on the 13th day. But the others, verbally whipped by the indestructible Rickenbacker when their courage flagged, and nursed along by his help and advice when these were needed, developed the will to live—and did live to be rescued.

These books are an imperishable record to prove that man has within his poor tent of flesh some spark that all the materialism in the world can neither explain nor conquer.

How was it done? What enabled seven men to win out? Whittaker has an explanation. God helped them! The lieutenant's story, first published in a series in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE, has more of power and moving emotion in it than a thousand sermons. It describes miracles.

To the sufferers came a bird, a sea swallow, to perch on the hat of "Capt. Eddie," as they called him. Was it not a miracle that he captured this creature and that its flesh nurtured the starving voyagers and furnished them with bait that attracted fish to their lines? And was it not miraculous that a rain storm that was being blown away from them turned when they prayed to God and came back . . . against the wind? Whittaker asserts it was.

Once a day, at least, the sorely tried mariners drew their rafts together, read the New Testament that Sergt. Johnny Bartek had brought with him, and made their supplications to Divine Power. The conclusion is inescapable; these men talked to God as the wandering Hebrews talked to Jahveh of old; they asked favors of a Being that filled the sea and the skies to the empty horizon and came to them in the whirlwinds that held the life preserving rain.

To illustrate the spirit in which the troubled travelers spoke in prayer, the words of Capt. Cherry may be requoted after Whittaker: "Old Master, we called on You for food and You delivered. We ask You now for water. We've done the best we could. If You don't make up Your mind pretty soon, I guess that's all there'll be to it. It looks like the next move is up to You, Old Master."

It wasn't all prayer and complaining aboard those little rafts. The men tortured themselves at times with discussions of fruit juices, big thick steaks, and, tho it seems unbelievable, strawberry malted milks. The whole history came from a notebook in which Lieut. Whittaker wrote every day except one.

Capt. Rickenbacker's story of the doings on the rafts is all from memory and is not quite so complete in this respect as the lieutenant's. Of the religious spirit he speaks only briefly, but enough to corroborate Whittaker. His recital is concerned with the practical aspects of the fight for life; of the arrangements he and the others made to catch rainwater; of his frequent cussing of those who threatened to jump overboard or commit other unsocial acts. He says that at least two of his companions have since confessed to him they stayed alive only because they anticipated the pleasure of burying him at sea. He describes the minute divisions made of the little bits of food they had and the doling out of the rainwater so laboriously gathered and stored. His theme is that God helped those who helped themselves.

But Rickenbacker has other things to disclose: An intimate picture of Goering and the other German leaders who built up the Nazi air power; another picture of the grim fighting on Guadalcanal and in New Guinea; his contention that no production record ever made can compare with the contributions the men in the hell holes of the Pacific are making to the winning of the war. He is as proud of the army and the navy as a man can be. He knows whereof he speaks; he went on with his inspection of air fields out there after he had recuperated a little from the ordeal on the rafts. Incidentally, he has suggested many improvements to be made in the construction of these devices, that they may be more comfortable and more safe

The Whittaker book has a foreword by Charles Leavelle of the Tribune staff, who collaborated with the lieutenant in the series of newspaper articles. It is illustrated by photographs and by sketches by Gary Sheahan, Tribune artist. Capt. Rickenbacker's foreword writer is W. L. White; the book has several pages of photos.

Two extra good books, these, and so different that both should be read. You can't go wrong on either.

Dr. Levy Reviews Niebuhr's Book on Destiny of Man

"THE NATURE AND DESTINY OF MAN," Vol. II, by Reinhold Niebuhr. [Scribners, $2.75.]

Reviewed by Dr. Felix A. Levy.

The vast erudition, the keen analysis and brilliant dialectic that characterize this work is what one expects of its distinguished author. He defends the orthodox position of Christianity's interpretation of history, with its central conviction and doctrine of the inevitability of the Christ as Son of God and Son of Man, the necessity of the Atonement and all that these imply for the individual as well as for mankind. The argument is "sicklied o'er with the pale cast" of Calvinism, yet granting its premises, the thesis is almost irrefutable.

Catholic, Jew and liberal Protestant will not agree with the almost naive orthodox acceptance of dogmas, despite the author's ingenious defense of them, despite the deep piety, a well knit logic and an encyclopedic learning that gleam from every page of the book. Many will refuse to accept his setting of history as against nature, with Jesus as Christian thought regards him, as the only possible reconciler of differences; with his interpretation of faith [magnificent apologetic tho it be] particularly as a solvent of intellectual paradoxes; with his criticism of both secular and religious liberalism, Catholicism, Protestantism and the Renaissance with his gloomy Lutheran ethics.

The pious believer, however, will find in this book ample support for his convictions and a vigorous rationale in defense of the traditional viewpoint. The rationalist will dismiss Niebuhr's carefully integrated presentation, penetrating and scintillating as it is, as casuistry, built upon insecure and untenable historical and philosophical premises. Yet the book is a splendid tour de force and all thoughtful minds should read this passionate and stimulating essay from which much can be learned.

Two Strikes Against This Epic of Labor

"JAKE HOME," by Ruth McKenny. [Harcourt, Brace, $3.]

Reviewed by Marcia Winn.

Ruth McKenny is known chiefly for her witty New Yorker chronicles of her sister, Eileen. These chronicles were made into a smash hit on the stage and in the movies. In this, her first long novel, Miss McKenny is [we think] extraordinarily unlucky. Altho the book is a superb piece of work, it is out of tune with the thinking of the average American in 1943, for it is a proletarian novel extolling strikes.

This is the story of Jake Home, a strangeling, with flaming hair, who was born in a Pennsylvania coal mining town. In a town of pale, thin, meek children of pale, thin, meek parents, he was an anomaly from the outset. As the storekeeper who taught him to recite the whole of Hamlet at the age of 10 said then, "He ain't for this world." By the time he was 11 he was replacing his dead father in the mines. By the time he was 18 he had organized a union, called a strike in which his brother was killed, and fled to Altoona to work in the railroad shops.

Here for a while he cast aside all thoughts of union organization. He became a company man, a brilliant one, and shot up rapidly. He married a girl who looked like a picture of an ancient Greek statue he had seen in a correspondence course and who sought to make him "correct" and conventional. He bought a house and a car and had a kitchen with ruffled white curtains. Then one day came a picketing of the railroad works. Jake watched it from his window, and watched, and watched. Late in the day he walked out to the picket line, picked up a standard, and began to march with the strikers. The police beat him to a pulp, and his wife deserted him.

Later Jake went to New York and began organizing the waterfront. From there he went to Boston to aid in the Sacco-Vanzetti protest movement. He was a strong Communist by now and fell in love with a wealthy girl who toyed with Communist movement. He began to cross the American continent to tell the people about Sacco and Vanzetti and got as far as the Imperial valley, then in the toils of a lettuce strike, before he again was beaten up. After that he relaxed, went to Europe on his second wife's money, took a fat advertising job from her father, tossed it all up, and went to work for the Communist party again. As the book ends, he is leading a gigantic unemployed demonstration.

There is no question about the merits of "Jake Home." The book is an epic, and Jake Home, with his torn love for his fellow man, is a figure you will not easily forget [or want to forget], but at this time it certainly comes out with two strikes already against it.

'Men in Shadow', Another War Play, on Broadway

Melodrama Has Realistic and Tense Moments

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK, [Special].—Some like mystery stories; some don't. Some like melodrama; some don't. For those who like melodrama there is a nice, exciting setup in "Men in Shadow," which is the thrill of the week in our theater. Three American airmen have crashed in occupied France. Unable to leave the country and having no fondness for Nazi prison camps, they hide out in the loft of an old mill near a French farmhouse and dedicate their lives to sabotage.

They are working enthusiastically and with considerable success with the underground forces of the Fighting French when their leader, a mysterious fellow named Lew, comes in one day with another flyer who has bailed out of his plane and broken both his legs between knee and ankle in the fall.

This newcomer turns out to be an American flyer, and what are they going to do with him? There are Nazi troops concentrating in the neighborhood. The healthy saboteurs have made all arrangements for their own escape. Either they must desert their new buddy and leave him, with his broken legs, to the mercy of the Nazis, or they must stay with him and risk their own capture, which naturally means their death.

They decide that, whatever else happens, they will not desert their new friend. First, the old Frenchwoman who owns the farm, she having some knowledge of surgery, will set the broken legs as best she can and get them into some sort of crude splints. Which she does. And then, after 48 hours, they will devise some way, if necessary, to take him with them.

The bone setting scene, as you may easily imagine, is one of the most thrilling, and also painful, theater-going adventures your theater correspondent has experienced in the length of his play-going career. Yet it is done with such simple and intelligent skill that the audience is held to a sort of horrified fascination instead of becoming hysterical and jittery. The old Frenchwoman twists and pulls the blood spattered shanks, while Lew holds the injured man [called Wally] down and tries to anesthetize his mind by forcing him to recite all the smutty limericks he ever heard.

This touch of the sort of realism that gave the Grand Guignol theater of Paris its world-wide reputation is repeated at the play's end. Then the Nazis close in and the saboteurs must get out. There is a trap door in the ceiling of the old mill that leads to the roof. This offers a temporary hiding place.

It is comparatively easy for the athletic men whose bodies are sound to jump from an overturned box, catch the edge of the trap door's framework and pull themselves up. But there is no chance for the man with his legs in splints to make the leap.

From outside you hear the tramp of marching men, the shouted German commands, the clatter of camp preparations in the yard below. These heighten the suspense. Inside Lew is left alone with the crippled flyer; his two able pals have gone for help and have not returned. As danger mounts, Lew fixes a plank against the overturned box to give him a ramp to walk up. Slowly, painfully he gets Wally over his shoulder and struggles up the ramp

Now the injured flyer, his face distorted with pain, his muffled moans of pain filling the room, must reach up, grab the trap, and try to pull himself thru. He tries and fails. Lew all but drops him. He tries again and fails again. Then, as the Nazis are heard entering the mill below, the two boys who have disappeared dramatically stick their heads thru the trapdoor. They reach out for the wounded man's hands and pull him to safety. Lew runs back, makes the leap, catches the framework and pulls himself thru the door as the enemy appears at the head of the stairs.

It is such a stunt scene as the late Douglas Fairbanks delighted in playing, both on the stage and on the screen. His widow, Sylvia Ashley, was in the audience and must have been reminded of the leaping Doug many times during the evening.

We have had two of these exciting melodramas the last few weeks. The other is "Counterattack," which, as I have written you, is the story of two Soviet soldiers who are left to guard seven captured Nazis in a bombed cellar near Stalingrad. The suspense here is created by the efforts of the smarter Germans to outwit the simple Russians. I think it is the better melodrama of the two. In addition to its melodramatic excitements it poses the dilemma of two representatives of the soviet free state facing, and trying to convert, seven of the enemy to the communistic line of thought. This, to me, gives it added importance as war drama reflecting present day conditions and problems.

John Steinbeck's "The Moon Is Down" is to be released as a motion picture this week by 20th Century-Fox and we will see what happens to the story this time. As a book, you may recall, the Steinbeck work was hailed with raving shouts of joy. Here, screamed the book reviewers, was the greatest novel that had come out of the war. Here was the answer to the Nazi menace in the occupied countries. Here was the first intelligent effort to separate humanity conscious Germans from the beasts of Berlin who have taken over the army and poisoned the minds of the people.

Then came the play version and a different kind of critical assault. The Steinbeck play, a majority of the drama's critics insisted, was good drama, but bad propaganda. Having been miscast with actors expressing gentle rather than roughly forceful personalities, it gave the Germans the better of the argument. Otto Kruger, playing the hero, could not possibly be accepted as such a ruthless Nazi as playgoers and news readers had been led to picture and accept as typical of the Nazi officer class. And Kruger's pals of the invading forces were much too human and considerate to be real.

The book's enthusiasts turned on the drama's apologists and columns of verbal shrapnel were dropped in various theater centers. During the excitement 20th Century-Fox bought the screen rights to "The Moon Is Down" for the impressive sum of $300,000. Curiosity on the part of many people should help them get their money back.

I don't believe, however, the picture folk are going to have an easy time selling the pictured drama at a profit after it has passed the first few weeks of its showing. The picture producers have made exactly the same mistake the play producers made. They have miscast the Nazi officers. If ever a story cried out for sane rather than box office type-casting this one did.

CLASSICAL RECORDINGS

By Claudia Cassidy.

As new record releases dwindle with each passing month, the manufacturers naturally consider dipping back into the archives and calling attention to classic performances cherished by the few but not necessarily known to the many. This month Columbia has chosen Sir Thomas Beecham's recording of Schubert's Symphony No. 5, B flat major, played by the London Philharmonic orchestra [M-366: four 12-inch records] and the result is no cause for a lawsuit. It is a full textured and beautiful recording of fresh and charming music so widely neglected it has become almost a program novelty. The set's final side is taken up by music from "Rosamunde"—the Entr'Acte No. 2 and Shepherd's Melody, played by the Hallé orchestra, under the deft direction of the late Sir Hamilton Harty.

Gladys Swarthout is no prima donna to stay put in a groove. For Victor she has just recorded some "Musical Show Hits," meaning eight popular songs, with the aid of the Victor Concert orchestra [M-935: four 10-inch records]. The coffee with cream quality of Miss Swarthout's voice is ideal for Irving Berlin's "Tomorrow Is a Lovely Day," and she sings "Dancing in the Dark" with a good deal of dusky charm. For the torch songs I'll take Dinah Shore, and no one else ever sang "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" like Tamara, lost in the clipper crash, but this is in general an agreeable album of tunes you can't forget.

Gladys Swarthout.

Back in 1930 Chicago had three performances of Beethoven's "Fidelio," and René Maison, the Belgian tenor, sang Florestan in two of them. He has just made a 12-inch record for Columbia featuring the recitative and aria, "Gott! welch' Dunkel hier," with orchestra conducted by Erich Leinsdorf. The music is heroic and so is the performance, but the recording is only partially satisfactory. Like so many big voices of declamatory rather than lyric style, Mr. Maison's tenor is not easy to capture. Sometimes it emerges in full stature, sometimes it has the hollow sound of singing in a barrel.

Arthur Whittemore and Jack Lowe, duo pianists, have set a brilliant transcription of Prokofieff's March from "The Love for Three Oranges" on a 10-inch record, and that is the best reason for buying the record. However, it also holds a Reger Waltz and Dubensky's "Gossips."

Tibbett Heads Artists' Committee on China Aid

Lawrence Tibbett has been appointed chairman of the newly formed musicians and artists committee of United China Relief. Among the committee members are Leopold Stokowski, Mischa Elman, Howard Barlow, Duke Ellington, Gladys Swarthout, Lauritz Melchior, Nathan Milstein, and Marjorie Lawrence.

Notes of the Theater

Two additional plays have landed on the booking horizon. The first to arrive will be a revival of "Stage Door," the comedy by Edna Ferber and George S. Kaufman, which comes to the Studebaker Sunday evening, April 4, with Glenda Farrell in the leading rôle. It was first shown here at the Grand in 1938, with Joan Bennett as the star. Miss Farrell was in Chicago in 1940 in "Thanks for My Wife," with Alan Dinehart and Lyle Talbot. The second play is brand new, being "Harem Scarem," a farce about to be tried out in Cleveland by Al Rosen, co-producer of "Good Night Ladies." Mr. Rosen says Donald Brian will be in it, and just the other day in New York he told Cecil Smith he plans a Chicago opening April 26 at the Harris.

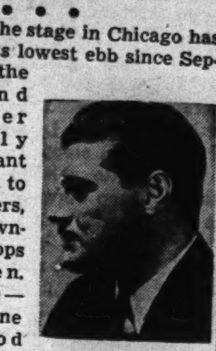
Meanwhile, the stage in Chicago has now reached its lowest ebb since September. With the Harris and Studebaker temporarily closed for want of any product to offer customers, only four downtown showshops are now open. Two of these—the Blackstone with "Good Night, Ladies" and the Great Northern with "Maid of the Ozarks"—are occupied by long run successes, which means that the only relatively new offerings in Chicago are "Private Lives," with Ruth Chatterton and Ralph Forbes, at the Erlanger and "The Doughgirls" at the Selwyn.



Ralph Forbes.

As "Good Night, Ladies" swings into its 50th week at the Blackstone theater, patrons are "returning in droves" to see the Turkish bath farce for a second, third, or sixth time, according to the box office treasurer, George Rochford, who ought to know. When patrons come back they always want to sit closer than before, it seems. Perhaps the management will have to put seats on the stage for the first anniversary performance on April 12. Tickets are already on sale for that noteworthy date. As yet, however, the management is not accepting reservations for the 67th week, which is when "Good Night, Ladies" will outstrip "Life with Father." [Pun.]

"The Eve of St. Mark," which left the Harris last night, will play in Toledo tomorrow evening. From there it will move to Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Buffalo, and Pittsburgh, in that order.

Viola Roache of the cast of "The Doughgirls" at the Selwyn last appeared here as Cornelia Otis Skinner's maid and dresser in "Theatre." Before that she was in Constance Bennett's "Easy Virtue" company. Her last New York assignment was in a short-lived revival of John Drinkwater's "Bird in Hand." A native of Norwalk, England, Miss Roache became acquainted with the world at a youthful age when she toured the African veldt in a repertory of plays by Shaw, Galsworthy, and Wilde. After a year of traveling by train, automobile, and camel, she shipped for Toronto, where she joined the company of Sir Seymour Hicks, remaining with him for several seasons. Her first New York play was "Panthea," in 1914. Among the plays in which she has acted in recent years are "The Distaff Side," "Call It a Day," "Pride and Prejudice," "Jane Eyre," and "Wuthering Heights."

A revival of Ibsen's "Hedda Gabler," directed by John Bettenbender, will be presented under the auspices of James Hargis Connelly in the little theater on the 17th floor of the Kimball building for two performances, on March 27 and 29. Mr. Bettenbender, formerly director of the Austin Community theater, has drawn his cast from various sub-professional groups in the city. The players include Isabelle Conrath, Everett Clarke, Jane Cohan, Ed Meekin, Rita Gibson, and Maude Fernow.

"Little Black Sambo" has broken all records in the 16 year history of the children's theater of the Goodman and instead of closing yesterday as planned, the play will give two additional performances on Sunday afternoons, March 28 and April 4, at 3 o'clock. "The Elves and the Shoemaker" will open next Saturday afternoon, as scheduled.

Word from summer theaters is conspicuous for its absence, but the Belfry players at Williams Bay, Wis., are determined to keep open this year, to the extent that they alone, among summer theater groups, have sent out a preliminary prospectus. Their season will be shortened, and only four plays will be presented instead of the usual six. The projected schedule will begin on July 15 and close on Sept. 4. The group is asking past subscribers to indicate their willingness to support the theater again, in spite of gasoline rationing. Since the Belfry theater is only a mile outside of Williams Bay, the transportation problem ought not to be insoluble.

"Porgy and Bess" is still touring about the midwest. Business has been immense everywhere, with weekly figures considerably larger than in most weeks during the 11 week run at the Studebaker theater here. On May 2 the Gershwin opera opens a San Francisco engagement, playing both there and in Los Angeles under the auspices of the operetta association which gives annual subscription performances in both cities. The tour presumably will end for the season on June 5, but traveling will be resumed in the fall.

As predicted exclusively in this column, Katharine Cornell's Chicago engagement in Chekhov's "The Three Sisters" will begin on May 17 at the Erlanger theater. "The Three Sisters" is Miss Cornell's 13th production since she became America's only actress-manager. When "The Three Sisters" completes its New York run on April 3 it will have amassed a total of 15 weeks, or 122 performances. This is a record for the play in America or England. The blinding list of names in the cast includes, in addition to Miss Cornell, Judith Anderson, Edmund Gwenn, Ruth Gordon, Dennis King, Gertrude Musgrove, Alexander Knox, McKay Morris, and Tom Powers. Settings and costumes are by Motley, who designed "The Doctor's Dilemma" and the Laurence Olivier-Vivien Leigh production of "Romeo and Juliet."

Coulouris Will Present 'Richard III' on Broadway

Altho there has been no Shakespearean revival on Broadway this season, George Coulouris plans to remedy the deficiency by presenting "Richard III." in the near future. Mr. Coulouris, seen here last May as the villainous Rumanian count in "Watch on the Rhine," will direct and also act the title rôle himself. The last previous New York production of "Richard III." was Walter Hampden's, which ran for eight performances in 1934.

Eckstein's Book Illuminating Study of Japanese Gangdom

"IN PEACE JAPAN BREEDS WAR," by Gustav Eckstein. [Harper, $2.50.]

Reviewed by Fanny Butcher.

There have been many books about Japan—about Japan's political past, about Japan's war aims, about the historical and religious background of contemporary Japanese thought. Gustav Eckstein's "In Peace Japan Breeds War" is unique among them.

It is unlike other books not only because its author has a rare and true genius for words and writes prose so beautifully designed for its purpose that it gives the reader subtle and inevitable satisfaction, but because the author is by nature, training, and vocation a scientist.

Dr. Eckstein teaches the physiology of the nervous system at the University of Cincinnati. He has done research in the behavior of animals and birds as well as of human beings. He wrote epically of the free social life of canaries in one of the classics of our modern literature, "Canary"—but only after he had observed his subjects for 11 years. In "Lives" he told of the habits, and their relation to their environments of other creatures he had studied, of a million cockroaches, a green parrot, seven cats, a macaw, and of Joe, the Portuguese college campus gardener who had a strange and loving genius with the earth. In "Noguchi" he wrote the biography of one of the greatest of modern research scientists, the man who discovered the parasite of yellow fever and ironically died of it.

Dr. Eckstein's first trip to Japan in 1924 was made on impulse, at the suggestion of a fellow research man. He landed the very day that the American exclusion act went into effect. The concentration of Japanese hatred of Americans was daily and often painfully evident to him. Later trips confirmed that evidence. After Dec. 7, 1941, he began putting under the microscope of his mind the "cultures" of impressions which he had been collecting since 1924. Now, by selecting the most revealing of those impressions and describing them brilliantly, he makes his readers see the Japanese vividly—scientifically.

The scenes are unforgettable, among them that of the flood which almost wrecked the whole village yearly, where for "the price of a few rice fields" the flood waters could have been permanently diverted, but "even to talk of that was regarded as ridiculous self-indulgence. They were used to disaster and seemed almost to choose not to avoid it," he says.

There is the picture of children receiving traditional punishment for badness when "a bit of dry weed may be rolled into a cone and placed on the child's abdomen, and the weed set afire"—early conditioning for the adult obsessions with assassination and suicide—promoting the psychology of "victory and death." There is a picture of the last grain of rice sluiced out of the cup with a few drops of tea because it is a religious sin to waste one grain of rice. Or the picture of the geisha houses, where the whole male recreation life of the nation takes place, for there are no family parties in Japan.

"There could be no fathers' night at a PTA," the author says, and the geisha houses "are the place of hot talk, stimulated by flirtations, consequently of the preparation of hot deeds. They make the male more male, may make him coarser, more vigorous, freer of his home, more swashbuckling, and they certainly make the Japanese mind more devious for us to understand."

Dr. Eckstein points out that the language barrier is especially high between us and Japan, for, while English is easy for the Japanese to learn, their highly nuanced language is practically impossible for us to conquer. He suggests that any attempts at reaching the Japanese by propaganda in their own language are doomed to failure.

Enough of Japan's history has been drawn in these pages to convince any one that "no gang drove Japan into war. It was rather a gang nation that went to war," as Dr. Eckstein says. That gang nation has always had a plan. Generally speaking, he says, "it was yellow against white, a Japanese Asia against the world." And he points out: "It must be vividly remembered that she has been disappointed in the past and has not been stopped . . . she would be quite able to swallow a defeat, I keep repeating—and go on from there."

By its inferences rather than by its direct statements, Dr. Eckstein's book is probably the most illuminating one you have read about Japan. Not so illuminating about Japan today as Otto Tolischus' just published and important "Tokyo Record," which is an enlarged diary kept of the fatal year of 1941, with background material for the momentous happenings of those months. Dr. Eckstein's book is more like an X-ray of the solid bones—and cancerous growths—of a body politic which we have seen only when covered by its functional kimonos or in the western raiment which however cleverly cut in imitation, obviously does not fit.

Autobiography of an Orphan

"SYRIAN YANKEE," by Salom Rizk. [Doubleday, Doran, $2.75.]

From chasing pigs on a Syrian hillside, to repairing shoes in Ames, Ia., to lecturing on American citizenship under the wing of the Reader's Digest, is a long way. Salom Rizk has covered it adventurously, gratefully, and speedily. Speedily, excepting a five years' delay in Beirut for lack of a birth certificate to prove that his mother had been an American citizen.

This autobiography of a Syrian orphan is an invigorating tonic for these days when American democracy is being tested. Rizk never has ceased to be amazed at the way Americans take their blessings and opportunities for granted. His yearnings to remind them of the contrast between this country and the lands of their forefathers became even more intense after a trip back to Syria by way of Europe in 1933. He writes as informally as he used to begin his speeches, "I am not a speaker. I am a dishwasher." Later it was "I am not a speechmaker, I am only a shoemaker. I am going to tell you my story."

Here are simplicity, sincerity, perseverance, and humor. The chapter on a greenhorn's adventures in a Sioux City slaughterhouse is particularly graphic and amusing. This is the kind of book you pick up to skim thru and find yourself reading every word avidly, drinking in the wisdom of a Syrian Yankee. It's excellent to read aloud to the family—much more effective than pompous essays on freedom!

BOOKMAN'S HOLIDAY

By Charles Collins.

MAURICE MAETERLINCK'S essay on the dog's relation to mankind, paraphrased by Booth Tarkington a few days ago in a letter to the Indianapolis city council, has been widely circulated in this country in book form, usually under the title, "My Friend the Dog." Regarding the dog's attitude toward its master, Maeterlinck wrote:

"He is the only living being that has found and recognizes an indubitable, tangible, unexceptionable, and definite God. He knows to what to devote the best that is in him. He has not to seek for a perfect, superior, and infinite power in the darkness, amid successive lies, hypotheses, and dreams. That power is there, before him, and he moves in its light."

Maeterlinck was among the founding members of the International Anti-Vivisection league.

The Boswell club, a newcomer among Chicago's learned dinner groups, appears to have recruited its membership largely from the book publishing business. Within the esoteric circle the members use names from the roster of Dr. Samuel Johnson's coterie at The Club, founded in 1765. The "Dr. Johnson" of the organization is E. A. Ribal, who addressed a St. Patrick's day meeting on the subject, "George Borrow, Knight of the Open Road." The Boswells publish, for their own amusement, a monthly bulletin called the Rambler. To provide for occasional assemblies of mixed company, the club has thoughtfully organized a ladies' auxiliary called the Boswell society.

All of which reminds us of the extinct Elizabethans of the lusty 1920s. It was founded more for conviviality than for scholarship, and more in the spirit of Mark Twain's bawdy essay, "1601," found only in the underworld of letters, than in the mood of Shakespearean studies. The meetings were rare because a long period of convalescence was needed. At one, the presiding officer delivered the same declamation three times and, upon recovery, while adjusting an ice bag to his fevered brow, he said: "O, I forgot to tell my story about the Texas judge and the Mexican horse thief." Among the survivors of the Elizabethans are Vincent Starrett, Dr. Morris Fishbein, Ashton Stevens, Ben Hecht, Philip Richard Davis, and self.

Then there was the Heliogabalus club, which thrived during World War I, but never got its name into the newspapers. It was recruited among the younger and gayer membership of the Cliff Dwellers and devoted itself to exotic eating as well as high thinking. The Heliogabalans occasionally met in atmospheric racial restaurants, but oftener at the Cliff Dwellers, and their chief ambition, never realized, was to send Matthews, their steward, into the canebrakes of Louisiana to shoot a wild turkey for their table. William Morton Payne, associate editor of the Dial and translator of Ibsen's "Brand," was the dean of this society. Survivors are Henri C. E. David, university professor; Allan Philbrick, artist; Guy Hardy, theater manager; Andrew N. Rebori, architect, and self.

"The English People," by D. W. Brogan [Alfred A. Knopf, publication date April 5], when opened at random, throws the following light upon the "old school tie" tradition:

"The hold of the public school system on the English mind is revealed in its literary aspect, the school story. This is a purely English phenomenon. All literatures have stories of youth and adolescence which may include some account of formal education. But they are not like the classical English school stories which are marked by the acceptance of the values of adolescence. . . . There are almost as many English school stories as there are English detective stories."

The most famous example of such tales is Kipling's "Stalky and Co." The grandfather of them all is Thomas Hughes' "Tom Brown at Rugby," a book so widely read in this country that its influence contributed to the development of intercollegiate football. But for Tom Brown's exploits at "rugger," the collegiate pageantry of the autumn season might be in worship of "soccer."

Mark Aldanov, a Russian novelist who fled from bolshevism in 1920 to live in Paris, is represented on Scribner's April schedule by a large scale work called "The Fifth Seal." The scene, for the most part, is a soviet embassy somewhere in Europe; the time is the eve of World War II. Aldanov transplanted himself a second time in 1940, and is now living in New York. His ideology corresponds with American liberalism.

Duranty Still Writing as He Pleases

"SEARCH FOR A KEY," by Walter Duranty. [Simon & Schuster, $2.50.]

Reviewed by John Abbot Clark.

Those who have read "I Write As I Please" hardly need to be told that Walter Duranty is never dull. In his latest book he is still writing and thinking and feeling very much as he pleases.

"Search for a Key" is called a novel—at least that is what is says on the jacket. The chief character, Oliver Joby, tells the story in the first person, but, as Duranty says in the foreword: "This book relates the life of a man, with his follies and wiser moments, his unhappiness and joy. Parts of it may seem flippant or silly, or even sinful; but such are the ways of men. They were Oliver Joby's ways, but they might have been yours—or mine."

Oliver Joby may not be a dead ringer for Walter Duranty, but the kinship is quite obviously something more than just collateral. Oliver's life is true to the pattern, if not to the details, of the author's.

The narrative opens with the death of the 10 year old boy's parents, and his going to live with his father's uncle, the vicar, in Norfolk. The early chapters, like those of "The Education of Henry Adams," have a warmth and glow that many of the later sections of both volumes lack. But, as we have said, being dull is terribly uphill work for Duranty, and at no point in "Search for a Key" does he even come close to making the grade.

After grammar school and Harrow comes Paris, "the golden and lovely city" of those years just before 1914, when health and youth were everything. Then back to Cambridge, with more lessons in Greek and Latin—and poker, and the bumping races on the Cam.

"How remote and untroubled they seem," he muses [thinking of the 3,000 youths he had known at the university, 2,000 of whom had been killed in the war], "those peaceful years at Cambridge, as one looks back from a world in which death and destruction and pain and distress of nations have become the chief factors of existence!"

As the result of spending his patrimony on a batch of phony Rembrandt etchings, Oliver, at 21, was not only homeless but practically penniless. The subsequent chapters carry the story down to the present. The young man's love for the Russian girl, Marie Lvovna, enables the book to keep up the thin pretense of being a novel, or at least of being something more than what it mainly, and, as far as we're concerned, most acceptably, is. That is: Duranty's own colorful and exciting Odyssey, his brushes and rendezvous with recent world history in the making.

Oliver's experiences with opium, the peace conference, the sinister significance for the future of D'Annunzio's conquest of Fiume, the Baltic, and Volga famines, Lenin's funeral, the accounts of Hitler's rise to power, and the Chinese adventures are just a few of the things that make you forget that this is supposed to be a novel—as if any one cared.

Besides the history, private and public, the amusing anecdotes and yarns, and the lively vignettes of personages, places, and events, there are the reflections and meditations—on life and death, love and happiness. In short, what is the meaning of it all? Perhaps, as is implied thruout the book, what is finally important is not the finding but the seeking. Then again, like the young writer mentioned by Bennett Cerf some time ago, it may be that most of us know the truth when we find it, but it doesn't satisfy us. We want something better.

Death of Benet Mourned as Enduring Loss to Literature

By Harry Hansen.

New York.

WHEN Stephen Vincent Benet died we lost a brilliant creator and a master craftsman. His sudden death has cast deep gloom over literary New York and left us feeling as bereft as when Thomas Wolfe died. To his own generation, now in the saddle and eager to make its work last, Benet's death was calamitous. He died at 44, with his hand becoming more firm and sure with each accomplishment; Thomas Wolfe died at 37, when he was just achieving mastery of his vast recordings. The only comment we can make is to regret anew the defects of the human machine.

Three days before Benet died he and I were booked to talk to the Art Alliance of Philadelphia about the Rivers of America series of books, of which he was an editor with Carl Carmer. That night he did not appear and it was announced that he was a victim of the weather. But Stanley Rinehart, his publisher, whispered to me that Benet had suffered a heart attack, one that gave cause for concern, because his health was not of the best. It may interest readers of his stories to know that many of his fine poems and sketches were written between attacks of arthritis, from which he was a chronic sufferer.

Ignored Demand for Iconoclasm.

What makes us doubly sad is that he stood for the positive, constructive side of American writing. He had gone ahead, on his own, to write about American folklore and history when the dominant mood was iconoclastic. He produced "John Brown's Body" when Sinclair Lewis' sharp, ironic criticism of American life was at the height of its popularity. But Benet could have done nothing else. He was an individual, deep rooted in American lore, going his own way. He wrote poetry in his teens and his home atmosphere was favorable to it, despite the fact that his father was a military man—colonel of ordnance. His grandfather, for whom he was named, was a brigadier general and chief of ordnance. Both men were West Point graduates. Stephen Vincent Benet read military history in his father's home and there acquired his familiarity with the Civil war tales that run thru "John Brown's Body."

His Name Won't Be Forgotten.

And in the 1930s, when it was fashionable to go proletarian and rip into "bourgeois and capitalist" America, Benet dug into American history anew and brought forth such a tale as "The Devil and Daniel Webster," which has a good chance to be read in the schools as long as the classics of our land are esteemed. Yet this feeling for positive, constructive writing did not make Benet critical of poets who went other ways. He encouraged the artist to express himself and as editor of the Yale Series of Younger Poets gave a great many youngsters their chance. Only last fall he spoke to me, with pride, of the choice of Margaret Walker's poems, "For My People," for this series. He also helped award to young authors funds at the disposal of the well endowed National Academy of Arts and Letters. And when, with his wife, Rosemary Carr, he wrote about the work of other authors, he was invariably helpful and friendly. He was an author in the true sense of the word and definitely had more than one story to tell.

Woollcott's Orneriness Helps Friend.

An interesting use was made last week of a bit of Woollcott banter not unlike the biting comment that is credited to Sheridan Whiteside in "The Man Who Came to Dinner." George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart, who wrote that play about Alexander Woollcott, had been sued for damages in the federal court by a radio writer who charged that they infringed upon his script. The judge admitted that Woollcott was the original of the leading character in both plays, but dismissed the suit on the ground that Kaufman and Hart wrote from intimate knowledge that the other man could not have had. For Moss Hart had introduced in evidence the inscription Woollcott had written in the guest book of Hart's country home in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, after a visit there. It read: "This is to certify that, on my first visit to Moss Hart's manor house, I had one of the most unpleasant evenings I can recall ever having spent."

A Note About Titles for Books.

Henry Bellaman, best known for his "King's Row," which made him immediately acceptable to Hollywood, has just completed a new novel dealing with a family in the Teche country of Louisiana—among the bayous. The author expects to call it "Victoria Grandolet" after the leading character. The other day I listened to an animated discussion between a publisher and an editor on an appropriate title for the book. One of them wished to call it "White Cloud," after the name of the white house in which the action takes place. The other objected that this would lead readers to expect a book about an Indian. It is quite true that this would be suggested to many. But the proof of the pudding is in the eating. "Rebecca," as a title, means nothing. Today it is known as one of the most popular novels and motion pictures of our time. If "Victoria Grandolet" becomes popular, the name will be established.

Honor for Carver's Birthplace.

The movement to honor George Washington Carver, the great scientist of Tuskegee, touches both publishing and politics. Richard Pilant, member of the English faculty of Washington university, St. Louis, came to see me about it the other day while he was in town collecting testimonies and good words from the writing fraternity. When, later on, you see a long list of authors supporting the Carver memorial project, you may thank Pilant for taking time off to get a list. He wants congress to appropriate money for preserving—or rather commemorating—Carver's birthplace, known as Diamond Grove, near Neosho, Mo., on federal route 66.

He tells me the cabin is gone, but could be reconstructed and then embalmed in a temple like the Lincoln cabin at Hodgensville. I don't favor this sort of thing—in fact, I don't think the Greek temple over Abraham Lincoln's hut makes him any greater, but some people like the idea. At any rate, some sort of a memorial is indicated. Rackham Holt's biography of Carver will come from Doubleday's presses in April, and in the summer Julian Messner, Inc., will publish another, "George Washington Carver, Scientist," chiefly for young readers. It is by Shirley Graham and George Dewey Lipscomb. It seems that Shirley Graham had long cherished the idea of writing a book about Carver and finally set out for Tuskegee. She arrived there the day before Carver's death.

Prof. Warren Reviews Two Books on War Time England

"I SAW TWO ENGLANDS," by H. V. Morton. [Dodd, Mead, $3.]
"FLIGHT TO ENGLAND," by I. A. R. Wylie. [Random House, $1.75.]

Reviewed by Robert Penn Warren.

In "I Saw Two Englands" H. V. Morton describes two journeys, one taken in 1939, on the eve of the war, thru Kent, Sussex, Surrey, and Oxfordshire, and another thru war time England.

The first journey, undertaken at the "moment when the king and queen, approaching the coasts of Canada in a fog, had temporarily banished the town of Danzig from the front page, and when the laurel wreath which Mr. Chamberlain had worn since Munich was becoming rather shabby," leads the reader to inspect the home of Gen. Wolfe; Hever castle, where Ann Boleyn lived; Penshurst, the home of Philip Sidney; Knowle, the seat of the Sackvilles; Canterbury, where Thomas à Becket was murdered; Pyecombe, where shepherds' crooks are made [chiefly for hikers and bishops in late years]; Roman ruins; Oxford; Cumnor, where Amy Robsart met her death from causes not yet clear; Blenheim castle, and Fotheringhay.

It is an agreeable, unsystematic tour, across a smiling summer landscape and across the centuries of English history, whose violences have now become a tapestry of anecdote. Mr. Morton is a skilful guide, tastefully interweaving considerations of space and time, architectural details and charming vistas with the murder of Becket and the execution of Mary Stuart. He captures the temper of a cultivated holiday spent in surroundings where the strong colors of history have faded into dreamy pastel shades.

Presumably, with this holiday, and this view of history, the second part of the book, which deals with "the phony war" and the awakening of Dunkirk, is supposed to contrast sharply. "I was conscious," Mr. Morton writes at the outset of the second journey, "that in the twinkling of an eye all had changed. Gone was the careless, easy-to-see England that had been technically at peace for so long." The tourist is now conducted to a country house converted into headquarters for the Cereal Import committee, sees the manufacture of Wellington bombers, rides in a tank on Salisbury plain, visits flying schools, prison camps, and factories. But the intended effect scarcely comes off. We get a belaboring of the obvious. The anecdotes and comments run rather thin here, as when the R. A. F. flyer becomes the knight of old, engaged in "tournaments in the boundless lists of the sky."

In "Flight to England" there is a good deal more talk about the regeneration, mixed in with properly caustic remarks about luxury at Claridge's and the stupidity of brass hats. On her last visit to England, Miss Wylie finds the people changed: "It's something elusive and disconcerting. It manifests itself in a gentleness—an almost caressing gentleness." And the English are "better looking." The aviators are "like the dying. Their inner vision is fixed on a far horizon." Or she offers a girl a 25 cent lipstick. "She looks at me with warm eyes. I'm not sure that there are not tears in them." Birds sing and boys play cricket on a sunny afternoon at Stratford, and "it seems to me not only the heart of England but the heart of civilization."

"Flight to England" tells us a good deal about Miss Wylie's sensibility and sentiments, but I doubt that it tells us exactly what we want, or need, to know about England during the war.

Four of Ambler's Best Spy Thrillers

"INTRIGUE," by Eric Ambler. [Knopf, $2.95.]

Alfred Hitchcock, the pudgy movie thrillmaster, considers Eric Ambler the greatest master of the spy novel, and says as much in an introduction to this collection of four of Ambler's best creepies.

The titles are "Journey Into Fear," "A Coffin for Dimitrios," "Cause for Alarm," and "Background to Danger." All are masterly and all of them take ordinary fellows thru tough situations.

Ruth Bryan's Plan for New World Order

"LOOK FORWARD, WARRIOR," by Ruth Bryan Owen. [Dodd, Mead, $1.50.]

Reviewed by John Cudahy.

While there are many causes of international conflict, they may in a broad classification be grouped into two troubled spheres: the emotional strains from ageless nationalistic animosities, and economic insufficiency, inability to sustain dense, increasing populations.

Likewise the plans of post-war planners may be divided into two schools of thought: those who believe that a warless world can be realized solely by a functioning world government, and those who, stressing economic ills, believe these ills can be remedied by an equitable distribution of material resources.

This economic feature of the diagnosis does not give much pause to the author of "Look Forward, Warrior." She affirms that "The nations shall be free to carry on their commerce, with access to the world's markets" and ". . . shall enjoy an equitable access to essential commodities."

These passages are illustrative of her parliamentary approach, which would impose a Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the Union of Nations based literally upon the great charters of American independence and government. The American system has prospered and maintained peace among states of divergent interests, why should not the same system prove successful on a world scale, Mrs. Owen seems to reason.

Ruth Bryan Owen [Mrs. Borge Rohde] is the daughter of William Jennings Bryan, the Great Commoner. She has served in congress and as American minister to Denmark. The method of her "study," as she designates her book, is the blueprint constitutional method, which has little relevance to reality.

Friends of American Writers Will Present Literary Award Wednesday

By Irene Steyskal

Literary groups give evidence that spring's flirtatious whistling has penetrated into the writing field and stirred up within it an abundance of activity. Or just possibly the feverish literary output is inspired by the announcement of annual writing contests and awards. Whatever the motivation, apparently every scribbler, the visionary amateur and the hard bitten professional alike, has felt a new flow of the sap of ambition permeating his being, while around his head circle multitudinous wings of bright new ideas.

Already the awards committee of the Friends of American Writers has selected the published work that will win for the author the organization's 1943 award. The information, however, will remain a closely guarded secret until Wednesday, when the presentation will be made at a noon luncheon in the Chicago Athletic association.

Heretofore the presentation of the annual award has been an occasion for a brilliant and expensive banquet in one of the largest of the loop hotels, a party drawing hundreds of guests, including an impressive parade of topflight authors, journalists, poets, and literary critics.

War restrictions, of course, have imposed changes on this year's plans, but these apply only to such minor details as menu and the amount of the prize check, and not to personages and literary enthusiasm.

The annual spring luncheon must serve this year as the setting for the presentation, and attendance will be restricted to members of the organization, Mrs. George B. Van Buren, president of the group, has announced. In more prosperous times the organization presented its fortunate author with a check for $1,000. Because the group did not feel justified in holding its customary large benefit this year, the sum of $750 was raised by taxing each member. The entire amount, however, will be given in cash, rather than partially in war bonds as last year, the awards committee has ordained.

And, tho the award winner may be restricted to one cup of coffee, he yet will receive full measure of the honors and praise of fellow craftsmen. At the speakers' table when the award is made will be Dr. Stanley T. Pargellis of the Newberry library; Fanny Butcher of The Tribune, and Sterling North and A. D. Spectorsky, the literary critics of two other Chicago papers; Mrs. Everett O. Fontaine, secretary of the annual midwest Writers Conference; John Storm, publisher, and Lt. Lloyd Wendt and Herman Kogan, the young co-authors of "Lords of the Levee," the high spirited chronicle of Chicago's first ward in the blatant and picturesque day of John (Bathhouse) Coughlin and Michael (Hinky Dink) Kenna.

A check also will be given at the luncheon to Poetry magazine. Mrs. Phyllis R. Wermuth, who served as chairman of the award committee, will present the prizes.

The award last year went to Paul Engle, faculty member of the University of Iowa and Rhodes scholar, for his book of poetry, "West of Midnight." Since 1928, the year the practice of making awards was established, the Friends of American Writers have given a total of $10,500 in literary prizes.

Of interest to all writers and literary groups in the central states is the announcement from Dean Kenneth Olson of the Northwestern university school of journalism that this year the Writers Conference of the Middle west will be held under the sponsorship of Northwestern. The time is set tentatively for July 28 to 31. This will be the fourth meeting of the flourishing conference, which was the result of a coöperative plan of 17 literary groups in this vicinity. Last year's session, held at the Orrington hotel in Evanston, was attended by nearly 900 persons.

The middle west conference, during which pulp writer and classicist meet in easy association, each undoubtedly profiting from the contact, is distinguished by its expansive and democratic atmosphere from older and more severely academic conferences in other parts of the country. Its character stems from the number and variety of groups actively participating, groups that range from the distinguished Society of Midland Authors to reading circles.

Northwestern university's adoption of the rapidly growing conference will influence, of course, the shaping of the youthful enterprise, and advance it toward a place of equal importance with the older literary meetings. Most of the midwestern colleges will be represented on the program this year by their faculty authors and editors and students of outstanding writing ability.

Mrs. Fontaine is continuing as conference secretary this season, and remaining on the executive board are Dr. Otto Eisenschiml, Phyllis Whitney, Mrs. A. H. Hilsabeck, Mrs. George Van Buren, and Frederic Litten.

Garden Club Tables Bloom in Assortment of Spring Colors

By Edith Weigle.

Flowers were not only on the tables but were echoed in the lovely pastel colors of the linen, china, and glassware in the recent exhibition held here by the members of the Garden Club of Illinois. A block long row of dining tables furnished the principal exhibits. Others were fireplace mantel arrangements, small table arrangements shown together with swatches of wallpaper and draperies, and shadow boxes in which were displays of artificial flowers in appropriate containers. There also was a beautifully decorated outdoor barbecue room with adjoining gardening room, the exhibit of the Thimbles and Thumb club.

One of the most colorful tables was that of the Garden Club of the South Shore, and was set for six. Contrasting with a green linen cloth and luncheon napkins were shiny, deep brown pottery plates and yellow crystal goblets.

In a shallow yellow pottery bowl in the center of the table was a charming arrangement of bright orange and yellow gallardias with brown twigs for accent. And nearby stood an amusing brown pottery donkey.

The brown note was repeated in little leaf shaped trays that held small chocolate candies. The effect of this table was very pleasing because of its color scheme, its good proportions, and its simplicity.

More formal in feeling was the Winnetka Garden club's table set for an afternoon tea or reception. A light green organdy cloth was used, and in the center masses of calla lillies and ivy were arranged in a handsome antique silver urn. Four silver candlesticks held white tapers, and at one end of the table was a silver coffee urn and tray, while at the other was a Georgian silver tea service.

The plates and cups on this table were cream white Lennox with green borders on which were white classic wreaths.

The handicrafts of Mexico helped to create an unusually effective luncheon table, set by the Bannockburn Garden club. On a chartreuse cloth were Mexican pottery plates of pale gray with green and yellow rims and a center decoration of a green cactus. Instead of the usual water glasses Mexican tin tumblers were used and this same ware fashioned the rectangular centerpiece in which were a dozen calla lillies. Two pairs of hand carved wooden figures flanked this lovely flower arrangement.

Other interesting items in the long row of tables: A heavy, coarse, natural toned linen luncheon cloth with pockets to hold each napkin; a fish net, cork floats and all, spread over a white cloth, on a sea motif table;

Mrs. Henry McGurren and her two year old daughter, Karen, make an attractive combination. Mrs. McGurren is a member of the Junior auxiliary of La Rabida Jackson Park sanitarium, which will be working on its annual Dollar Drive next month. The Junior auxiliary will join the Senior board in giving its annual spring luncheon, bridge party and fashion show on May 4 at the Del Prado hotel.

Church Women to Hold Three Sessions Friday

Highlighting the church women's calendar are two meetings scheduled for this week and next. The woman's department of the Chicago Church federation has three sessions booked for Friday morning and afternoon in the assembly hall of the Stevens building, 17 North State street. At 3 o'clock next Sunday Mrs. Fred Prafke will preside at the semi-annual executive board meeting of the Chicago Women's Missionary federation in the Atlantic hotel.

Climax of the Chicago Church federation assembly will be a panel discussion at 2 o'clock Friday on "Christian Citizens Called to Meet Rising Juvenile Delinquency." This is to be a joint session with members of Christian Citizenship council, and promises to be of particular interest because of the qualified speakers who will participate. Mrs. O. R. Sellers, welfare chairman of the church federation and president of the citizenship council, will lead the round table.

Other speakers scheduled are Mrs. W. W. Ramsey, instructor of the citizenship council; the Rev. Virgil E. Lowder, secretary of the social service department of the church federation; the Rev. Charles L. Venable, chairman of the commission on ministry in public institutions of the church federation; Miss Mary E. Gordon, worker at the Cook Juvenile court representing the Chicago Church federation, and Walter Duda, probation officer of the juvenile court. Morning conferences include a board of managers meeting at 10 o'clock and a delegates hour at 11:30.

The Women's Missionary federation, an affiliate of the American Lutheran church, has 15 member units in the Chicagoland area. Six of these are in Chicago; others are in Blue Island, Oak Lawn, Forest Park, South Chicago, Gary, Michigan City, Oak Forest, and Goshen, Ind. Other officers of the group meeting with their president, Mrs. Prafke, are Mrs. C. N. Bussee and Mrs. Matilda Fry, both of Chicago, and Mrs. E. A. Sievert of Blue Island.

In buying a slip examine the shoulder straps to see that they are fastened securely; if the slip is lace trimmed, the straps should be fastened to the fabric as well as to the lace.

Fashions as I See Them

By Judith Cass

The description of a costume worn by Mrs. Samuel A. Culbertson II. at a recent cocktail gathering set down by a masculine admirer and intended for publication in this column follows, verbatim: "She had on a white hat consisting of four roses with wires coming down the back covered in white leather or something, and a black crêpe dress that some one said was peg-topped. It looked as if it had saddle bags here," said the admirer, suiting action to the words, "and here. She had two rhinestone clips here [touching an imaginary breast pocket] and matching rhinestone earrings." A man who must be well informed on the latest fashions and probably less at a loss to describe them, is Clarence B. Mitchell, who witnessed a recent showing seated happily on the floor beside his wife. Because they arrived late, Mrs. Mitchell, clad in a prettily worked hat of sable to match her three-quarters length coat, was able to sit in a comfortable arm chair at the back of the room, instead of in one of the little gilt chairs surrounding the platform on which the mannequins paraded. Mrs. Dwight H. Green's new spring bonnet is a cluster of pale yellow and cerise clover blossoms tilted over her brow and anchored with a bandeau of caramel brown grosgrain. A mist of green veiling adds flattery.

Mrs. Abner Stilwell sometimes wears a suit of beige gabardine made from one of Mr. Stilwell's suits. With it goes a brown felt cloche and brown accessories. Mrs. Kendall I. Lingle has a stunning tweed suit made from one her father discarded after scarcely wearing it because he thought it too youthful. Mrs. Horatio B. Hackett goes to committee meetings in a dress of brown crêpe ornamented by a gold nailhead studded belt. About her neck she wears a heavy gold link necklace. Mrs. Morris L. Johnston appeared at a recent meeting of the Chicago Council of Foreign Relations in a tailored frock of black with a double choker of pearls. Her costume was relieved by the cheery red trimming of her black beret type hat.

The day of the council meeting was one of the coldest of the winter, and many a woman who was on her way up to the ballroom wished that she had been wearing the handsome all-enveloping coat of raccoon skins in which William Boyden was seen in the lobby of the Palmer House. Mrs. Walter S. Brewster's wrap on the occasion was a cape of squirrel. Her feet were snugly encased in stadium boots. Mrs. Walter B. Wolf arrived wrapped in mink and wearing a hat of green with red birds' wings shooting upwards. Mrs. Silas Strawn's council going hat was a frothy nothing of silvery blossoms held to her head by a black band. Mrs. Theodore Tieken heard the program in a smart gray tweed suit trimmed with gray krimmer. A love of a hat was the rose be-decked one Mrs. Maurice T. Moore of New York wore to address a meeting of Chicago U. S. O. volunteer workers. The roses were fastened to a saucy black straw saucer, and tied with fragile black veiling. Mrs. Moore's sophisticated black frock had rather a low V neckline. The skirt was draped and gathered toward the front. Appearing with Mrs. Moore on the program was Mrs. Robert S. Pirie, also of New York, who formerly lived here. Her traveling costume was a navy blue suit with a plaited skirt, and a matching, all-enveloping greatcoat of the same blue. On her head was a tiny calot of navy, clipped with diamonds and trimmed further with a wisp of veiling. Receiving visitors and workers at the center was Miss Marjorie Kimball, whose costume was a tailored brown suit with a hat to match made of the same material, twisted into a rosette. Her bag was an outsize one also of brown material.

Mrs. Harry T., Chicago--I water my sweet peas at the roots, for I've found that water on the leaves will make them turn yellow.

Angela F., New York City—I give my house ferns a sprinkling of cold tea every few days. I save any left-over tea from our meals. It doesn't take much to help the ferns a lot.

Elinor H., Evanston, Ill.—If you want to avoid any signs of streaking in your silk hose and let the moisture evaporate evenly, hang hose between damp towels and let them dry in this manner.

Mary G., Peru, Ind.—I can make my beds more easily and quickly since I worked a couple of French knots into the center of top of each piece of bedding. No more measuring and fussing.

Mrs. Jane G., Chicago—When my potted plants stop blooming I tuck a very few appropriate fake flowers in their foliage. I never bother with any artificial leaves. They are likely to betray the ruse. I just use flowers, and not very many of them.

• • •

Mrs. G. H., Chicago—My husband—in self-defense—made me a tool rack which he placed on the basement stairway wall. Here I keep all the small tools needed for little repair jobs—screw driver, hammer, pliers, etc. This has been a life saver for me, and it has saved hubby's tool chest from plundering. Now he has his own tools for his own use.

Chicagoans Prepare to Greet Metropolitan Opera Company Tomorrow

By Cousin Eve

A breeze from the deep south blows the Metropolitan Opera company here tomorrow, not the ordinary run of things. The greatest singers in the world today will arrive en masse in the morning like an aviary of beautiful, many-colored, tropical birds, in Edward Johnson's opera troupe. When the New York season ends, the "Met" usually travels to New Orleans and Texas, but this year two unforeseen things happened—the New Orleans opera house was taken over by the government, and the Texas date was canceled because railroad facilities were lacking.

But the arrival in Chicago of the Metropolitan company has opened wide a vista of new things that may come to pass. A nationwide traveling Metropolitan company is being discussed which would visit the large cities of the country, autumn and spring. Instead of competing operas in Chicago, New York, and San Francisco, there would be only one company and one center of distribution.

Our season opens tomorrow night with Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro," which had its première in Vienna a century and a half ago. The opera was written around the Beaumarchais play, "Figaro," given in Paris and closed by the police as being too rough on the court and aristocratic society of those times. De Beaumarchais was the nom de plume of Pierre Auguste Caron, a daring French dramatist who lived in the Marais, ancient quarter of Paris still intact, in Rue Vielle du Temple near Cardinal Louis de Rohan.

Exquisite Mme. Jarmila Novotna sings tomorrow, and for Saturday's matinée Mr. Johnson has a sensational "Carmen" with the Belgian diva, Lily Djamel, as Carmen and Thomas Beecham conducting. Mme. Djamel apparently has taken New York by storm, as she took Richard Strauss' fancy in Salome—he likes her better as the rôle than any of the others.

On Tuesday a highly interesting reception will be held at the Arts club for Director Johnson and leading artists of the Metropolitan company, given by the Illinois Opera guild. Mme. Edith Mason will head the receiving line with Mrs. Hill Blackett, in the absence of the guild president, Mrs. J. G. McMillan. Others will be Mr. Johnson, Mrs. Arthur Meeker, Mrs. Louis Eckstein, and Dr. Rudolf Ganz. Guild members will be able to admire at close range their operatic favorites, which doesn't happen so often nowadays.

Despite the fact of Lent, there doesn't seem to be a dull moment on the home front. Income tax day lies behind us, and in the offing are good plays, good music, good friends, and occasional private divertissements.

In the immediate past one was extremely edified by a talk delivered at the Arts club one bright morning by Daniel Catton Rich, director of the Art institute of Chicago. Mr. Rich was fourth in that series of lectures arranged by Mrs. James Mitchell and her committee to benefit the magazine Poetry. Arthur Meeker Jr. was one speaker and Dr. Rudolf Ganz will follow next Saturday, and we all know that he is absolutely charming in his musical recollections, illustrating them on the piano, and witty as they make them.

As for Dan Rich, he has two great advantages, he is young and brilliant. Thoroly does he know his subject, which was "The Past and Future of Painting," and a crowd of arty folk sat entranced listening. Not one banal thing did he say in his all too short lecture, which was, however, embroidered by slides taken from our pictures at the Art institute.

Mr. Rich is far from pessimistic as to the future of painting. More people are painting now than ever painted before. As to war, it has hitherto stimulated the classic forms, and snuffed out tendencies toward romanticism. Illustrating this thesis were paintings before and after the Napoleonic wars, comparable in their extent with the present Hitler upheaval. The first was a romantic pre-war canvas by Goya, and the other was a scene of pageantry by David painted with elaborate classical forms and great attention to detail. Mr. Rich discussed Salvator Dali and surrealism, Picasso before and after, Leger, and others, including some Chicago painters whose works are hung in the current show at the Art institute. Whether people paint as therapy, says Daniel Rich, or whether they just paint, it's being done a great deal. And he closed his talk amusingly—with himself as a reader of tea leaves in a cup of tea, looking into the future of painting.

I saw many known to me that morning. Among them Mrs. William Burry, Mrs. James Mitchell, Miss Lucy Driscoll, Mrs. Weymouth Kirkland, Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, Mrs. Alfred Shaw, Mrs. Theodora Badger, and William S. Monroe, brother of the late

What's in a Name for Baby? A Lot, Writer Advises Parents

By Gladys Huntington Bevans.

[Copyright: 1943: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.]

"What's in a name?" said Will Shakespeare. "That which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." And he dismisses the matter.

Well, he can. As for me, I think there's a lot in a name. And evidently many prospective mothers and fathers feel the same about it. Time was when I thought most parents had this business all mapped out before the "great event," either using grandmother's first name, mother's maiden name, or repeating father's name, used for generations in the family. Or perhaps a favorite, romantic name from history or fiction was called in.

But now I know better. I know persons often rack their brains for weeks to decide, "What shall we call the baby if it's a girl, and what if it's a boy?" They write and ask me sometimes, but the people whom they besiege, it seems, are the librarians, one city library averaging from three hundred to four hundred requests a week for naming the baby.

What these besieged librarians do about names, as a last resort, is amusing. It is something like this: After giving out reference books and finding that these do not satisfy the prospective parent, they next resort to the names of library subscribers. If even then nothing suits the applicant, the librarians put their imaginations to work and produce such concoctions as Jamboy, Glamoureen, Stottoway, and Flimptz. This last, "Flimptz," is for a "blue eyed boy of a rather pixie nature!"

We're not so inventive in this department; we just suggest names that have been used before. Several years ago we did a big job ourselves, compiling two lists of names for our readers, to save them some of the uncertainty attendant upon that important question.

The names, like your choices, run a wide gamut. There are the fine old biblical names, many of which no longer have that classic ring to us because they have been used so much. There are names from the history of other lands—Irish, Scotch, French—some of which have been taken into our language in their foreign language form. There are, for little girl babies, many names of flowers.

Some families have a strong feeling for a family name where the children are all girls and where that name will die out with them; or where the brothers of the mother have no children and her maiden name will be extinct. In these cases, a family name can be used as a first name if it has the right sound. Or it may be used as a middle name. For instance, a boy may take his mother's maiden name, Henderson, as his first name: Henderson Smith. Or as his middle name: John Henderson Smith. A daughter may do the same: Jennifer Henderson Smith.

City Prepares to Greet Met Opera Group

Harriet Monroe, editor and founder of "Poetry."

A fat letter came in the post that same day from Mrs. Arthur Woolley-Hart in New York, an old friend who lives normally in London. When I think of Vivienne, it is to picture this lovely blonde creature on the top of some social wave in Florida or Newport, according to season.

But suddenly she has become an artist and is about to give a one man painting show in the Newton gallery, 11 East 57th street. There was a photograph of her with palette, easel and all, including a businesslike tunic. And some reproductions of her work which look very good indeed. Mrs. Woolley-Hart apparently sells her canvases, for several were loaned to the exhibition by private individuals.

There also were some blurbs of personal publicity, picturing Vivienne queening it in her beautiful house in Prince's Gate, London, as the wife of the late "coal king," Arthur Woolley-Hart. Also a sideline on this remarkable beauty rusticating at Tucker's Island, Bermuda, bought from Cornelius Crane of Chicago. But the blurbs were silent about her previous marriage to Count von Bernsdorf of Berlin, son of the former wartime ambassador to Washington. And no mention was made of Vivienne's jewels, and they were really something! There was that million dollar ring, for example, and the emeralds. But these frivolities are now buried deep, and Mrs. Woolley-Hart opened her exhibit last Monday with a benefit cocktail party, fashionable and crowded.

Of benefits in Chicago, the fashion show last Thursday at Marshall Field's for Bundles for America was unique. Presented in the circular 28 room, before a handpicked audience to the music of muted strings, it recalled many dear, dead days! Paris, Vienna, London! The stage was a fat pancake in the center of the little amphitheater; electricity, anticipation were in the air. Girls in the slim, well cut navy uniform of Bundles acted as ushers, and every seat was taken when Mrs. George Hartford moved up to the mike. Smart she looked in her uniform, and beautifully she did her job of carrying forward the show, introducing Janet Chatfield-Taylor. Mrs. Taylor commented crisply on the models, sped the mannequins on their way, kept things humming. The mannequins were chic creatures. Some were beautiful, some were rather plain. But all wore their clothes well, were coiffed in the strange new style, coming to us from points east, where the foreign stylists are all encamped.

Some of these smooth, high coiffures look like the oldtime "pompadour" and call for those atrocities, "rats." The high moment of the hour was Hildegarde, a popular entertainer, who breezed in and did the neat little stunt of super-salesmanship of auctioning flowers, a hat, some hosiery. She was escorted by four midshipmen, and sang a little navy song. Gracious was Hildegarde. Then tea was on, from a most delightful table in a small side salon. Flowers were standards of pink carnations shading down to rich crimson striped in white and Chicago's leading butlers were serving—among them Frances Sprague's maitre d'hotel and others from the clubs.

Mrs. John Downes was present from Great Lakes, Mrs. John P. Cohane, Mrs. John Crerar, Mrs. Joseph Otis, Mrs. Charles W. Dempster, Mrs. Albert Kales, Mrs. Lyman Walker, Mrs. Allen Clement, Mrs. Dudley Rutter. A patron said of the benefit that somehow happy days seemed to be here again.

Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis, now happily recovering from severe illness at the Presbyterian hospital, was thrilled to have a letter last week from a nephew, Philip R. Livingston, with the American forces in North Africa. As so many among us have husbands or sons in that army, I will quote from Lt. Livingston's letter, which goes into detail as to life with our troops on the dark continent.

"We are healthy and enjoying ourselves much in North Africa. The country and weather are lovely. There are rocky hills and quite a bit of vegetation. I have excellent quarters—an old French bed, quite soft, and a wash basin with running water.

"Our food is good, mostly dehydrated, and we have plenty of jam, jelly, fruit, and canned goods.

"You really have to take off your hat to the quartermaster; we have cigarets, tobacco, candy, soap, most anything you desire. Don't worry about us, as we are under far better conditions as to food and safety than many people at home.

"The population is French, Spanish, Italian, Arab, and French is the language. I had dinner, an excellent meal, at a French fort recently. It was seven courses, and as usual with the French, two hours long—and a nice rum omelet.

"We don't drink the wine here, and the beer is very flat. The French women here have pretty faces but their figures are terrible. Most of our social life is with American nurses and Red Cross girls, and there are a few hotels where we can dance. Our boat trip across was grand, just like a beautiful pleasure cruise. No trouble at all. The escort was perfect. Write and let me know how things are on the home front."

Mrs. Lewis' illness brought to Chicago from Nashville, Tenn., one of four charming nieces, Mrs. Frank W. Blair, who is one of the handsomest and most smartly turned out young matrons to visit here in a long time. Mrs. Lewis has taken each of the four Morrison sisters abroad and whirled them around in continental society as they grew up, and all have married and are now widely separated from their Georgia home.

Rose Douglas Morrison, the youngest girl, when traveling abroad with her aunt met and later married Hiram Bingham Jr., secretary of the American embassy in London. The Binghams are now living in Buenos Aires, where Harry is in the embassy, and they are domiciled in a marble palace with patios, pillars, mirrors, and all kinds of Argentine elegance and splendor. The Binghams have an army of five little sons and one little girl all under eight years, with a dash of red in their curls, and handsome faces. They are expecting to remain where they are until the end of the present war, and are infinitely delighted and pleased to be in Argentina—having quite fallen for the charm of the country. And they adore their marble palace.

Col. George Langhorne called a meeting of American Friends of Poland last week at the Casino. It was high time for the "friends" to get together to face the future, which at the present moment looks none too radiant for Poland. Nevertheless, a headquarters for Friends of Poland has been established in the Crerar library building, with maps and books of reference, and a young secretary, Miss Eastlake, in attendance.

Plans were discussed that day for a luncheon rally on April 15 at the Blackstone, where both American and Polish speakers will be heard. Jozef Staniewicz of the Polish consulate was there to present the Polish viewpoint. Membership in this society is solely among Americans. The only Polish names appearing on the general committee are those of Mrs. Staniewicz and Gloria Potocka, who are both Americans.

Mr. Staniewicz announced that day that before long a visit might be expected in Chicago from the Anthony Drexel Biddles. Tony Biddle is now a multiple ambassador at large in London for Poland, Jugo-Slavia and one or two other overrun countries.

Other news of charming diplomats is that Stephen Zamoiski has been removed as Gen. Waclav Sikorski's aide, to serve the Polish embassy in Washington. And better still, his exquisite wife, who was born a Radziwil, and whom I last saw in Rio de Janeiro, has flown north to rejoin her husband after a separation dating from the invasion of Warsaw in 1939. The Zamoiskis are a great old family of Poland and their Warsaw palace, I hear, is still standing.

Chicago Author Tours Fox Lot in Hollywood

By Kenneth Horan.

[In Hollywood, Cal., while her novel, "Remember the Day," is being adapted to the movies.]

HOLLYWOOD, CAL. The huge dining room at Twentieth Century Fox was filled with actors, actresses, directors, makeup men, architects, and writers. Joan Fontaine in her "Jane Eyre" costume [the big picture which is now under production] sat at the center table, her cast all about her. Young women in bodices and fichus and lace caps, sat about eating and smoking, apparently expecting to be photographed only from the waist up, for they all were wearing slacks. The combination of Jane Eyre bodice and dark blue slacks is something out of a nightmare. I couldn't help thinking of how Charlotte Brontë would have felt if she's seen her brain children so modernized. The effect was perfectly irresistible, leaping painlessly from the 18th to the 20th century.

Orson Welles strolled in, with a terrifying nose over his own rather inconspicuous feature, and his height built up a good two inches to make him more of a Rochester. There also was the cast of "Sweet Rosie O'Grady," with Betty Grable in old-fashioned ruffles. Robert Young in the costume of a young newspaper man of 50 years ago, and Adolphe Menjou as the most dilapidated looking editor ever seen. In fact, the dining room was full of actors in their costumes, as it is set conveniently near the various stages, so that they don't have to change clothes to come in and eat their midday meal. There are several cafés on the lot, but this one is exclusively for actors.

They were shooting two important pictures at 20th Century Fox, and it was a question as to which we wanted to see, but this was decided for us by our host, director of "Jane Eyre," for no visitors are allowed to his picture just now, because they are working under pressure to get it finished before certain members of the cast go into the army. So we went over to where "Sweet Rosie O'Grady" was being filmed. The set was the usual mass of wires, sound machines, and cameras. Miss Grable was standing talking to a young sailor she'd befriended who, like ourselves, wanted to see a picture being made. Robert Young, after he had been photographed about 10 times in the act of burning up a package of letters tied with pink ribbon [during which process he called out, passionately, "But I love her, I tell you, I love her"] sat down at a card table and, taking a pack of cards from his pocket, started to play solitaire until he should be called again. The properties would be moved, and he'd pick up his cards and his card table, and start all over again.

Menjou, on the other hand, retired to a trailer, his own, which has been hauled into the building, and there he can eat and sleep and read, and have perfect privacy, with its green curtains drawn, while all about him is confusion. There were dozens of stand-ins sitting about, one girl in particular who was knitting indefatigably. She is a stand-in for Betty Grable, and also for Alice Faye, so she can seldom be off the lot. After a picture is taken with the originals about a dozen times, it's taken the same number of times with the stand-ins.

Twentieth Century Fox comprises 225 acres, and is a mile long and a quarter mile wide. There are buildings housing mechanical units, which manufacture factory scenes, great mansions, interiors of every kind, and even railroad trains of various periods. There are dozens of gardens—formal, cutting, vegetable, what have you. There is a private lake on which floats Tyrone Power's galleon. This was used in "A Yank in the A. E. F." and in numberless other pictures. To one side of it is the Welsh village of "How Green Was My Valley," and nearby a London Square, a New Orleans mansion, a New England village, an oasis in a desert, a Moroccan village, a slice, in fact, of every kind of place in the world. The houses are three dimensional, with no backs, so that driving behind them, they look like scaffolding with lace and satin curtains hung at the windows, like unfinished rooms.

Sets in miniature have been built since the government's law prohibiting the expenditure of more than five thousand dollars on a set has been in force, and these are blown up and used successfully. They look odd, tiny villages placed here and there as tho Mr. and Mrs. Tom Thumb might appear at any moment to inhabit them.

The property building of this plant stores costly treasures, rich furnishings from Europe and Asia, and over 100,000 art treasures.

There are two enormous new sound stages, the most modern. These are air-cooled so that when musical comedies take place the participants need not suffer from the heat. One of these holds freezing equipment for Sonja Henie's skating scenes. And, by the way, she strolls busily about the gardens of my hotel, neatly dressed in tan jacket and slacks, followed by her little, black, French poodle, which wears a turquoise collar about its neck, and which frisks among the flowers and is generally ornamental.

Nearby is the Urban Art building, named for Joseph Urban, the famous Austrian artist, where the studio artists draw up their sets. Architects and draftsmen also are here.

The Tom Mix stables still stand, and house sound effects now, and arsenal and mechanical effects. Here smoke screens, gas clouds, barrages, and bombardments are created. Across the street is the little house used by Shirley Temple, it is a sky blue and white cottage, and has a schoolroom, bedroom, bath, and electric kitchen. A small garden surrounds it, where Shirley played between pictures. Beyond this is the dressing room of the late Will Rogers, a bungalow in desert style, with a garden of cacti, century plants, mesquite, etc. To the left of this is a Norman château which is called the Writers' building, and beyond it is the Music building.

The Stars' Dressing Room building is large and elaborate, as are the cafés and the cafeterias that feed more than 4,000 workers in Twentieth Century Fox. In the garden near the main café is a great bronze bell which, in 1917, tolled the outbreak of the Red revolution in Petrograd, Russia. It fell and was shattered, was shipped to Germany, recast in Westphalia, and later acquired by the studio.

When Chicago Was Young

By Herma Clark

Letters from Martha Freeman Esmond to her friend Julia Boyd of New York.

Chicago, March 12, 1895.

Dear Julia: Altho it is Lent, Chicago society turned out in full force for grand opera last night. We Presbyterians have never been accustomed to observe the period of fasting as do you Episcopalians, that is, to the extent of remaining away from entertainments we should have attended at any other time.

Mrs. H. O. Stone.

Our tendency is more now, I am glad to say, to observe Holy week. But I must tell you that many Episcopalians were at the opera and they didn't seem to feel guilty at all. How much of our feelings of sinfulness come from our fear of our friends' opinion!

The Auditorium was full to overflowing, 4,600 persons present, I heard. And high prices! I heard of one young man who paid $25 for two good seats, buying them from a "scalper." We had got ours far ahead, so we paid only a fair price, $4 a seat.

In a box with Mr. and Mrs. Eugene S. Pike sat Mrs. H. O. Stone, who has been absent from the city for about a year. Every one was glad to see her again and there was a stream of callers at the Pike box during intermissions. The artists were well known performers and seemed like old friends. They received ovations as they came on, Jean and Eduard de Reszke; Madam Melba; Nordica, Scalchi and Pol Plançon. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Roloson are great friends of Mme. Melba and so they were there in a box, as were the T. B. Blackstones, the Martin A Ryersons, the R. L. Henrys, and Mr. and Mrs. Levy Mayer.

The gowns were gorgeous, many from Paris, I am sure. Which reminds me to ask if you saw a notice of the death of Worth, the famous dressmaker.

He was just a name to me, but many ladies who bought their gowns in Paris and had been his patrons in person must feel as if they had lost a friend. I had one Worth gown, bought, of course, in Chicago at a dressmaking shop, so the great designer never heard my name, but it gave me great pride and joy. I wore it until it was in shreds, I was so proud of the label on the inside belt. Tho tempted, I never did take that belt out and sew it into another gown, as I have heard of others doing.

I had always thought of him as a Frenchman, and was surprised to learn that he was born in Lincolnshire, England, of parents who destined him for the printing trade. He rebelled at this and when he had tried it only seven months, he made his way to London, where he soon was working for the great store [pardon me, shop!] of Swan and Edgar. Here he began to be so useful, he attracted the attention of the heads of departments who adopted his suggestions. At 21 he went to Paris and after a period of working in a dry-goods store there, he embarked on a venture of his own, his partner being a Swede named Boberg. They were most successful and when Boberg retired Worth established his own business under his own name, which he made famous around the world.

It was the Empress Eugenie's favor, I believe, that helped him to fortune. He is said to have submitted all his best and newest designs to her. Of course, she was so beautiful she showed them off to the best advantage and all women who saw a gown on her wanted one like it. Not every one looked so elegant in his dresses.

One newspaper writer says of him that he disliked lean women and would often refuse the patronage of one who, as he felt, would not do his art credit. It was his decree that finally exiled the bustle. How on earth could we have endured to wear that monstrosity for 18 years in succession? Moreover, how could an artist like Charles Frederick Worth have endured to make bustled gowns? He might have released us from its thralldom long before he did, in 1890. Much love,

MARTHA FREEMAN ESMOND.

FOOT NOTES.

Charles Frederick Worth [1825-1895] was preëminent among the dress designers of Paris and made the address "5 Rue de la Paix" famous all over the world. His widow died in 1898.

The Little Eastman Boy.

Writing from Wichita, Kan., Charles John Eastman tells us that the small Chicago boy, Sidney Eastman, mentioned recently in this column, was Sidney Corning Eastman [U. of Mich., 1873] who was referee in bankruptcy in Chicago for many years. "His 'Eastman on Bankruptcy' published in 1903 is still an authority on the subject," writes Charles J. Eastman. "He was prominent in Chicago club life and lived in Kenilworth. His father, Zebina Eastman, was the publisher of 'The Genius of Liberty,' an early anti-slavery paper. Its name was later changed to 'The Western Citizen.' Sidney Eastman died April 1, 1930, at the age of 80."

Victorian Keepsake.

Since paying your income tax, you may like to recall what Sidney Smith, witty cleric of England, once wrote about taxation. You'll find it in "THE VICTORIAN KEEPSAKE," to be had at the TRIBUNE PUBLIC SERVICE OFFICES, 1 South Dearborn street or TRIBUNE TOWER. Price 50 cents. By mail 55 cents.

Joan Huizinga to Wed Edward Van Singel Jr.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert T. Huizinga of Hinsdale announce the engagement of their daughter, Joan Marie, to Edward Van Singel Jr., nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Shirts of Evanston. A Weekly Sponsored Column of Things Advertised and Interesting

New York, March 20th

Dear Readers,

This is a letter to each of you . . . for during the past week I have been hearing from women all over the country. I wish that I could answer personally,—but nearly 20,000 letters are beyond me! Just let me tell you, though, how much I enjoyed meeting you through a "postage stamp" . . . what fun it was to know that we meet through BUY-LINES each week! From now on we'll have more and more interesting BUY-LINES information to give,—hope you'll enjoy "getting personal" with the new products we'll discuss from now on. . . . Thanks again for your grand letters!

About an opportunity for you!

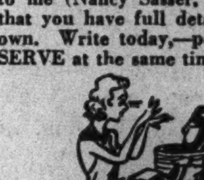
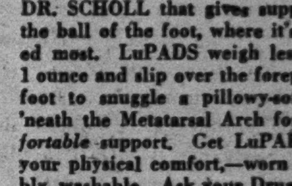
Did you ever consider how war is making professionals out of amateurs overnight? . . . guerrillas out of law-abiding citizens, soldiers out of clerks, nurses out of debs, job-holders out of housewives! But sometimes it's difficult to find the particular niche where YOU fit,—so here's a tip on a necessary service YOU can do on YOUR own time, and do remarkably well with real enjoyment. I won't tell you about it here,—but send a penny postal to me (Nancy Sasser, 420 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.) and I'll see that you have full details immediately on a profit-making business of your own. Write today,—perhaps THIS is the answer to your restless desire to SERVE at the same time you make good money!

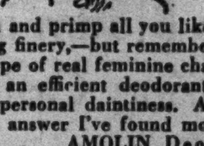


No woman wants to face Spring with hands that show ugly rough, red signs of housework...for soft, white hands are so important! So why not let SWAN SOAP help you in your home duties? SWAN'S purer than finest castiles, you know, and mild as May! It's as gentle to your hands when you're washing dishes, or laundering fine things, as it is to the tender skins of the babies it bathes in millions of American homes! Ask your Grocer or Druggist for SWAN! Its rich, creamy suds are efficient for EVERY soap-chore in your household, yet it agrees with your skin like the first breath of Spring.

Shoe Problem Tips

Here's a timely tip to help solve shoe rationing problems . . . pay special attention to proper foot support. Otherwise, you're liable to walk with an uneven tread . . . throwing more weight on certain parts of the shoe to cause uneven wearing. Try LuPADS . . . the new development by DR. SCHOLL that gives support at the ball of the foot, where it's needed most. LuPADS weigh less than 1 ounce and slip over the forepart of foot to snuggle a pillowy-soft pad 'neath the Metatarsal Arch for comfortable support. Get LuPADS for your physical comfort,—worn invisibly, washable. Ask your Drug, Shoe or Department store for LuPADS!





Preen and primp all you like in new Spring finery,—but remember there's no hope of real feminine charm UNLESS an efficient deodorant guards your personal daintiness. AMOLIN is the answer I've found most effective . . . AMOLIN Deodorant CREAM for underarm use and AMOLIN Personal Deodorant POWDER for sanitary protection on those difficult days when your most intimate secrets must be kept. Your Druggist has both these AMOLIN helps,—why not enlist them NOW? Face Spring with a new feeling of personal freshness, because AMOLIN Deodorants effectively deodorize! Remember that AMOLIN CREAM is soft, smooth, and vanishing . . . remember that the fine, white AMOLIN POWDER won't clog the finest meshes!

The trick in looking lovely is to STAY that way! And sometimes that's very hard to do . . . especially in these days of overwork and strain. That's why I again advise you to ask your drug, department or 10c store for EDNA WALLACE HOPPER'S Homogenized Facial Cream. Faithful use every night will actually help produce a beauty mirage in your skin . . . because this cream lubricates skin evenly and helps keep it firm and fresh looking. Get this Homogenized Facial Cream and pat briskly over face and throat with upward, outward strokes . . . pressing an extra amount gently on lines and wrinkles. Leave on 8 minutes, then wipe off. Try this famous HOPPER Cream for a new, easy way to help maintain face and throat beauty thruout the years.

For "ANGEL HANDS TO VALOUR GIVEN" — thus YARDLEY in London dedicated the Hand Cream created by them as a protective help toward cherishing the war-working hands of English gentlewomen. During the war years this delicate, creamy preparation has helped cherish warworking hands across the sea,—so it's dramatic news for American women in war work that YARDLEY is now making in this country this same Cream for their hands! Ask any fine shop for this famous YARDLEY Hand Cream,—pale, palest pink in color and caressingly gentle without stickiness . . . fragrant as Spring flowers . . . richly lubricating and protective to hand-skin threatened with rough, toilsome work. Try this gracious hand-help by YARDLEY,—brand new, really efficient . . . and what an economy at just 65c for 4½ ounces!

You'll excuse me if I brag,—but wouldn't YOU if you'd just discovered (1) 6 Ways to Make Meats Go Farther . . . (2) 8 Recipes for really tempting dishes made from our plentiful and wholesome American grain foods! . . . (3) Full, baby-easy directions for tricking up ye old davenport and arm chairs with new made-at-home slip covers for Spring . . . (4) Colored charts picturing the best buys in shoe-types and stockings (vital to know now that rationing has come!) . . . All this, I found in March McCALL'S,—a regular encyclopedia of information to help solve today's housekeeping and fashion tips...as well as McCALL'S March "gallery" of famous "fiction-eers"! Read this issue carefully.

The Old West Kept Alive by Grazing Feuds

The "public records" column of the local paper now and then yields a bit of interesting information. Tuesday's Arizona Daily Star, for example, records the following item under the "Justice Court" heading:

TUCSON, ARIZ.

"Ben Willoughby, herding and grazing goats on a cattle range; arraignment, plea of not guilty, trial set for March 29."

For those who might have thought that the old west is gone, the item is a reminder. The presence of a number of other items on the court calendar having to do with the felony of selling fire water to Indians is another reminder.

That herding and grazing business, tho, has a particularly interesting history. Zane Grey's "Shepherd of Guadalupe" may have led some to believe that the fued between chaperons of bovines and herders of other quadrupeds had ceased. But such is decidedly not the case; the old animus still persists.

Cattlemen insist that their herds will refuse to graze upon lands where sheep or goats have fed. Boyd Wilson, the friendly host of Rancho Linda Vista, a 100,000 acre cattle and guest ranch near here, is adamant on this score. Boyd's wife is wont to remark that the cattle would refuse only because Boyd tells them to, but in any case the folklore, and it may be sound animal husbandry as well, still makes possible such differences as are evidenced in the Willoughby case.

Nobody shoots anybody over issues such as this any more, or if so, the killing is always "accidental," but the presence of these cases on the court dockets always tends to prove that the wresting of a living from desert expanses is not altogether simple, and that controversy over which animals shall feed on cactus-studded nothingness is as endemic as that over spheres of influence in the needle trades.

The above provides a part of the setting, but probably has nothing to do with the story that Chicagoans in Arizona enjoy their vacations, pursue their studies and carry on as usual, despite cattlemen's feuds.

At the University of Arizona the perennial "pin epidemic" is on. A springtime phenomenon, this year it has manifested itself in typical fashions. Miss Jacquelyn Woodyatt, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Francis Woodyatt of Oak Park, has recently acquired the fraternity pin of John Crabb of Wichita, Kas. Miss Woodyatt, who is majoring in art at the university, has been elected 1943 desert queen, the top beauty and personality honor at the university.

Miss Charlotte Meyers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Meyers of Winnetka, has gone Miss Woodyatt one better by acquiring two pins in one week. Simultaneously she was initiated into her sorority and received the fraternity pin of Pete Bidegain of Dragoon, Ariz., winner of national cowboy honors at last year's intercollegiate rodeo. Bidegain also is former polo coach at the southern Arizona School for Boys. Initiated into the sorority at the same time was Jeanne Abbate, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles I. Abbate of River Forest.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Frederick Read of River Forest are currently in town, stopping at Christopher square. Their daughter, Clara Adelaide, is enrolled at the university, and she, too, has recently acquired a fraternity pin, that of John Le Gros of Oak Park, an undergraduate at Yale. Mr. and Mrs. Read intend staying in the Old Pueblo for several weeks.

The Woolf twins of Winnetka, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. James D. Woolf, also recently acquired pins. Martha Woolf is sporting the fraternity insignia of Thomas Manning of Sioux City, while her sister, Margaret, wears that of John Milne of Lajolla, Cal.

Other Chicagoland students in the news here include William Kimball, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Kimball. Bill won the bareback jumping contest at last week's university gymkhana. An advanced R. O. T. C. junior, Bill will enter officer's training in the summer. Van Taggart of Downers Grove was among the 45 university students who left for duty with the enlisted reserve corps.

Spring vacation for students of Wells college, Aurora, New York, meant a week's holiday, beginning last Thursday, for a number of north shore girls. Many schools have dispensed this year with this annual vacation, and these girls are luckier than most.

Miss Josephine Corcoran of Evanston, Miss Patricia Warton of Chicago, Miss Kittermaster of Highland Park, and Miss Barbara Hypes of Glencoe, are spending the week at home with their parents.

Miss Ellen McFarland of Evanston also returned home, bringing as her guest Miss Janet Lauderdale of Aurora. Miss Helen Husted of Evanston is visiting her sister, Mrs. John C. Holley, in Aberdeen, Md. Miss Barbara Bray of Glencoe, Miss Margaret Starbuck of Northbrook, and the Misses Margaret McClellan and Anne Hemenway of Evanston are guests of classmates in and around New York City.

Avocados Bud; It's Spring in Resort Florida

MIAMI BEACH, FLA.

Most people think of Florida as the land of eternal sunshine, with green grass growing all year 'round and flowers forever in bloom. And so it is. But that is not the whole story. Florida really has three climates—the northern part of the state, which is called southern climate; the middle section, or citrus region, which is semi-tropical, and the southern portion, the resort area, which is subtropical.

Yet even this southernmost portion is not completely tropical. It has some things in common with the northern hemisphere in which, for all its differences, it lies, and resort Florida does have a change of seasons, altho the change is scarcely perceptible to many Chicagoans, accustomed to gray Novembers, snowladen Januarys, and then the spring burst of bloom.

Spring in Miami and Miami Beach has its buds, too, chiefly on mango and avocado trees, but the change is more intangible than this. It is that subtle change in the air which spells spring anywhere, and the most noticeable effect on visitors is their restlessness and the turning of their thoughts to home, where spring is, it must be admitted, even lovelier.

Distinguished guests here for a three week stay are President Manuel Quezon of the Philippines and his family and aides. Heading the military parade last week was Gen. George C. Marshall, chief of staff of the United States army, who managed to stay here incognito for a three day visit. The army was represented officially by the two highest ranking air officials, Robert A. Lovett, assistant secretary of war for air, and Lt. Gen. Henry H. Arnold, commanding the army air forces, here for a tour of the technical training command.

Announcement has been made, incidentally, that the A. A. F. T. T. C., which now occupies 19,000 of the 21,000 available rooms in hotels and apartments at Miami Beach, will expand no further. Brig. Gen. Arnold N. Krogstad, commanding officer, who came here from Chicago, states that a leveling off process is already under way.

The Surf club, the biggest, gayest, and most spectacular of the three exclusive clubs here until it joined the army as a barracks and mess hall, seems to take many cues from its civilian history now that it is also a branch of the Miami Beach army recreation pier. Weekly dances are held, just as they used to be, and boxing matches which once were staged to amuse members at the Thursday night informal parties, are taking place again, but with competitors chosen from the membership this time. And drama, which was always an inadequate word for the famous Saturday night galas, makes its bow again at the Surf club, for a dramatic club composed of enlisted men stages performances there.

It isn't "Lo, the Poor Indian" in Miami any more. Between war industry and his exemption from certain rationing problems, the Seminole Indian is a lucky and comparatively rich man today. Working in a local shipbuilding plant are Seminoles by such picturesque names as Frank Cypress, Robert Osceloa, and Frank Jimmie, still wearing their colorful native dress. But it is in the newly rationed world that the Indian fares best. Altho these primitive people long ago yielded to the modern sewing machine to run up their dress of intricate design and almost interminable sections, it is virtually their only concession to civilization.

The majority of the Seminoles live in the Everglades, not in the city camps set up for sightseers, and subsist as they always have, on the land, the forest, and from the water. That is, they either grow, kill, or fish for their food. Canned goods rationing means little to them, depending as they do on roots and buds from wild plants or corn, beans, potatoes, peas, and melons which they grow, or fruit which grows wild.

Meat rationing means nothing to them, for they are given the right to hunt and fish every day of the year, and are not affected by any of the "closed seasons" regulating the sport of the white man. Bear meat and venison are staples in the Seminole diet, and there is no better eating anywhere than the wild turkey which only the Seminole is allowed to shoot out of season.

Spring showers will be welcomed in "Petticoat Lane" in Coconut Grove by two Chicagoans, Mrs. Albert J. Bigler and Mrs. M. A. Mead, who live across from each other and boast two of the loveliest gardens in the neighborhood. The Bigler garden features a plot of double red poinsettias, larkspurs, and phlox border around half the yard, and red and white begonias around the other half. Mrs. Mead gives petunias the honor spot in her garden and also features larkspur and phlox. Both gardens have a vegetable section, too, this year.

August B. Koch is expected this week-end from Chicago to rejoin Mrs. Koch at their home on La Gorce Island. Edwin S. Mills of Evanston, a trustee of Northwestern university, is terminating a visit with his sister, Mrs. W. H. McMaster, and Dr. McMaster at their Coral Gables residence.

Mrs. Robert Barrett and her son, Peter, of Chicago arrived last Monday to visit Mrs. George Barrett Sr. at her home on Dilido Island. Robert Barrett will join them here soon.

The Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, who with Mrs. Stone and their two young sons is wintering at their home in Coral Gables, is Presbyterian civilian chaplain to the army and navy in the Miami area, for the month of March. Dr. Stone was president of the Presbyterian Theological seminary in Chicago.

ENGAGED

Miss Irene Munson Lundgren, whose engagement to Robert Gerard Wiltgren, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Wiltgren of Park Ridge, has been announced by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Albert T. Lundgren of Lake Shore drive. Miss Lundgren is attending the Catholic University of America in Washington, D. C.

Women in War Work - - - - By Kate Massee

Seven young women who used to fly for fun have turned their talents to war and now are serving as Link trainer operators for American Airlines, Inc., at the company's pilot training school here. The young women simulate flight conditions for the students who fly the Link, a midget boxlike plane, where instrument flying conditions under a hood are simulated in the classroom. The trainer's instrument panel is identical to the equipment in a DC-3 commercial plane.

The operator regulates a set of instruments at her desk, which automatically broadcasts radio signals. As the student "flies" the route, every movement of the Link is automatically recorded on a map. When the student has completed his "flight," the girl operator checks the map and tests the accuracy of his trip, according to the directions she gave.

Each of the seven young women has had actual flying experience, a major requirement for the position. All the girls desire to hold a commercial pilot's license some day.

One of the operators, Miss Blanche Blair, 3551 North Whipple street, became interested in flying three years ago after her first trip in a commercial plane. She immediately enrolled in a ground school course, and received her certificate. The following year she flew at Ravenswood airport.

When Phyllis Ogden, 21, of Douglas avenue, Flossmoor, was still an honor student at Thornton Junior college she had the distinction of being the only girl in a class of 10 to attend the civil air patrol ground course at the college. She enjoyed flying Piper cubs so much she kept at it until she received her private license. When time and flight conditions permit, she flies at Rubinkam airport, near Harvey.

Miss Blanche Blair.

Miss Mary McDonnell, 1018 North Lavergne avenue, a graduate of Chicago Teachers' college, was interested in flying in addition to the less spectacular courses. When her study program permitted she was at any one of the airports around Chicago. Last year she was treasurer of the Chicago Girls' Flying club.

When the West Suburban Flying club was organized in Berwyn, Dorothy Melchior of Oak Park decided she wanted to learn to fly. She did, and now she's a Link trainer operator.

The first Link operator to be hired by American Airlines was Mrs. Florence Mall of Traverse lane, Flossmoor. She joined the air lines in September of last year. For a year and a half she flew her own plane, logged 145 hours, in addition to keeping a home. She flies whenever she gets a chance. She is a member of the 99'ers, an international association of licensed women pilots and other flying organizations.

Miss Harriett Mason joined the air lines in January. A former secretarial student, she lives at 10707 South Church street. The veteran of the operators, as far as accumulated flying hours is concerned, is Miss Marguerite Dickman, 212 North Crawford avenue. She has over 200 hours, since she became interested in flying in 1932. Before joining American, she did secretarial work for flying schools and pilot associations, in addition to conducting an aviation chit-chat radio program.

The women who have been salvaging grease, tin cans, and old hosiery were asked to scour their houses today for old alarm clocks. William L. McFetridge, area salvage director, said that 50,000 are needed now in the Chicago area for war workers. The manufacture of alarm clocks was halted in June by a war production board order. Those who can contribute a clock should contact the division of salvage, 130 North Wells street. Mr. McFetridge said the names of those who can contribute would be passed along to a war worker who would arrange to call for it and have it repaired. The number of man hours lost in war production because of the lack of an alarm clock is appalling, he said.

Dr. Eugene Noskin Wed Yesterday; Sister Engaged

Two announcements of romantic interest concerning the family of Dr. and Mrs. Harry Noskin of 718 Gordon terrace are made simultaneously. The engagement of their daughter, Vivian, to Dr. Aaron Gerber, son of Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gerber of 1424 Winnemac avenue, is announced by Dr. and Mrs. Noskin; and announcement of the marriage yesterday of Miss Gertrude Kaufmann to Dr. Eugene A. Noskin, the Noskins' son, comes from her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Max Kaufmann of the Sovereign hotel. The wedding took place at the Edgewater Beach hotel.

THE TRIBUNE TRAVELERS' GUIDE

Hot Springs Spa Popular in War Time

By Mildred Peterson.

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

The tenacity of purpose characteristic of the American people is evident as never before in their determination, at all costs, to travel to Hot Springs National Park, Ark. They arrive by some hook or crook at this world famous spa, which is one of the few still open for civilians to enjoy.

The annual bathhouse report, generally regarded as Hot Springs' barometer, revealed that the many commercial bathhouses here administered approximately 700,000 baths during the past year. Persons taking the baths last year at Hot Springs, where the curative hot waters which flow from the earth are owned, controled, and indorsed by the United States government, came from every state in the union and 20 foreign countries. Of this number, 32,611 came from over 200 cities and towns in Illinois.

During February, an all-time record of 80,211 baths was given, as compared to 74,975 during February, 1942. This does not include baths given at the $5,000,000 army and navy hospital, originally built in 1884, and its recently acquired annex, which is the former 500 room Eastman hotel, and several other sanitaria.

Never before have the hundreds of available hotels, apartments, rooms, boarding houses, cottages, tourist courts, and trailer parks been so crowded. More than ever before, Americans are realizing that it is their patriotic duty to keep well and, consequently, this spa is crowded with persons seeking rest, recreation, or recuperation from war "nerves." Local hotels and the chamber of commerce suggest that all prospective visitors procure reservations [with confirmation] before coming to the park, which is under the control and supervision of the director of the national park service, United States department of the interior.

When not occupied with taking the health-giving baths, the visitors, whether civilians, service men on furloughs, or persons on their way to visit relatives in nearby army camps, attend the horse races at Oaklawn Jockey club on the outskirts of the city, which are in progress thru May 27; avail themselves of the numerous sports, such as hiking, fishing, boating, horseback riding, and golf; or promenade down famous holly and magnolia bordered "Bath House Row" which is the spa's showplace.

Hot Springs is becoming almost as famous for its fishing of bass, wall-eyed pike, crappie, bream, and other species of the finny tribe as it is for its baths. According to Robert Page Lincoln, famous fisherman and writer, this part of Arkansas and the Tennesse river region has produced some of the largest wall-eyed pike caught in North America. A nearby fish hatchery replenishes the lakes and streams.

Here's an example of what goes on in this fisherman's paradise. The other day a judge, resident here, went out to the races and watched the ponies run for two races, when it suddenly occurred to him that it was a good bass fishing day. [He just sensed it.] Forthwith, he left the stands and, in short order, was at his home on Lake Hamilton. Picking up a companion, he got into a boat and hurried to a certain point of land where the "jedge" was quite certain the bass would be active. They used a deep running lure as the business part of the attraction and took 10 fine bass weighing 35 pounds, the largest being an 8½ pounder. Having taken the bass, the judge and his companion returned home, placing the bass in the back of the car, and returned to the track, and still were in time to sit in for the last race.

In keeping with war restrictions and regulations all types of wagons and vehicles are pressed into service to get the record breaking crowds to and from the track, which is within walking distance of the central part of the city. Race track officials, not to be outdone by numerous charity benefits sponsored by various organizations and groups, gave the first Saturday's proceeds of the 30 day meet, amounting to $18,000, to the Seamen's fund. It is not uncommon to see women knitting Red Cross sweaters while keeping an eye on the horses and the "tote" board.

Among the places of interest near Hot Springs are the open hot springs [all of the other 46 springs, from which flow a million gallons of water daily at 95 to 147 degrees F., are closed]; the only golf course in America inside a race track at Oaklawn Park, which has the only heated glass-enclosed reviewing stand in the United States; the 165 foot steel observation tower, which offers a bird's-eye view of Hot Springs; the nearby lakes and Ouachita mountains, which are covered with no less than 58 species of trees; the alligator, ostrich, and wild animal farms; Hell's Half Acre; nearby Crystal mountain; and Magnet Cove, a geologists' paradise, where more than 100 minerals have been found. Minerals from the surrounding territory have recently been utilized in the making of chanite, a new metal which is harder than steel and is used in tool manufacture.

Missouri Offers Visitor Varied Caverns, Springs

War production workers, military camp trainees, and their relatives and friends who visit Missouri this winter are learning that the Ozark state has many natural phenomena and recreational facilities. The American Express travel service points out that Missouri offers a diversified selection of state parks and regional playgrounds, with facilities for many types of outdoor recreation, hunting, and fishing. Of special interest are the springs, caves, and caverns.

The Meramec caverns, 58 miles from St. Louis, are 20 caverns known as the world's only five story cave. Near Reeds Springs is the Marvel cave, known for its vaulted peaks and stalagmites. Near Hannibal is the Mark Twain cave, frequently mentioned in the author's writings, which fictionize Tom Sawyer and Becky Thatcher as lost within. Outside Leasburg is the Onondaga cave, one of the largest and most beautiful of underground phenomena in America. Among its features are the Lost River Voyage and the Submarine room. Near Springfield is the Crystal cave. A replica of one of the "rooms" is in the National museum of Washington.

Minnesota's Arrowhead Resorts Plan for Summer

Resorts, lodges and hotels of the region, situated near established rail and bus routes, are preparing to provide accommodations for visitors seeking relaxation from war and industrial duties.

Anglers Meet Brief 'Crisis' in Sarasota

By Dorothy Johnson.

There was temporary chaos early in the season among fishermen visiting in Sarasota, Fla., and some harsh words were spoken, but it was all straightened out. We tell it now as an example of the minor hazards of vacationing in war time!

The fishing permits, which are compulsory yet easy to obtain in Florida, gave rise to a "situation." Not anticipating large civilian patronage this season, officials of Sarasota had made no special arrangements with the United States coast guard regarding identification cards for anglers. What happened was that Sarasota's vacation population grew beyond expectations, and anglers fleeing northern cold, learning at last the straight information about adequate living accommodations and hearing about the record catches, flocked to that city only to find that the identification cards they sought were not readily obtainable.

There was a roving crew of guardsmen, armed with finger printing apparatus and cards, which had been visiting coastal points at intervals. If a fisherman failed to connect when the crew was in his vicinity, however, it was necessary for him to go to headquarters at Tampa to obtain his permit, and it's obvious that gas rationing made that difficult.

What occurred next was that the guardsmen, arriving in Sarasota on a scheduled one day stand, were astonished when almost 200 anglers, both masculine and feminine, were still clamoring for cards as the time came to cease operations for the day. Billed for an appearance elsewhere early the next morning, the crew had to weigh anchor and shove off.

The situation was eased a bit, temporarily, by a ruling that an angler could board a properly licensed, deep sea charter boat on the strength of his automobile driver's license, but even this arrangement was unsatisfactory, because too many had left their licenses at home with their jacked-up cars.

At about this point there was near-mutiny in the ranks of visiting Sarasota fishermen, but then the coast guard saved the day. It quietly slipped into town, obtained office space on the municipal pier, and detailed a lieutenant and two yeomen to man it. The crew brought a truckload of blank identification cards and the requisite equipment for finger printing. All is now serene!

A fisherman now visits the coast guard office, presents a small photograph of himself to be affixed to his permit, exhibits documents necessary to prove his American citizenship [birth certificate or discharge from army, navy, or marine corps is the best], is finger printed, and that's all there is to it. After that he can fish where he pleases between sunrise and sunset. After dark he stays ashore and tells about the big ones he caught or those which got away.

What with gas rationing and other restrictions, will the Indiana state parks be open to the public this coming season?—I. B. D.

A recent bulletin from the Indiana department of conservation states the case in the affirmative. Altho a considerable decrease in attendance is anticipated as a result of war time travel restrictions, Indiana's state parks will be open for the use of the public during the spring and summer months.

Facilities for the use of picnic groups, campers, and other visitors already are available at Indiana Dunes and Clifty Falls state parks. At Mounds, Spring Mill, and McCormick's Creek state parks, preparations for visitors will be completed by March 28; at Brown county state park, April 1; at Shakamak state park, April 4; at Turkey Run state park, April 11; at Pokagon state park, April 30. Turkey Run and Potawatomi inns, closed temporarily for redecorating, and all other state park inns will be open to visitors this summer. All parks are open to visitors at the present time, altho with limited facilities, because water systems are not operated in the picnic and camping areas during winter months.

It is anticipated that an increased percentage of state park use this year will come from the immediate vicinity of the various parks, altho it is possible to utilize train and bus service in reaching most of them. Studies of previous attendance at the parks have shown that 70 per cent of the visitors come from within a radius of 50 miles.

Spring Brings More Flowers to Palm Beach

By Helen Van Hoy Smith.

PALM BEACH, FLA.

Official opening of spring sees added beauty in Palm Beach with social events even more numerous, and no rationing of gayeties discernible.

Since this is a land of perpetual springtime [according to the chamber of commerce] there is no miracle of bursting buds, and new green grass pushing up thru hard brown earth. But those who are interested can see that the avocados are in bloom and that green mangoes are already as large as eggs. Avocado blossoms grow in clusters, the individual blossom being minute, yet each flower is capable of growing into a fruit that often grows as large as a quart jar. Avocados, commonly called alligator pears, are packed with vitamins, and are extremely plentiful in Florida during the summer months. Orange and grapefruit trees are also heavy with "golden apples."

The Chicago colony in Palm Beach continues to entertain and to be entertained. A number of parties had been arranged for Mrs. Jacob Baur, but she had to get back to Chicago, and the only reservation obtainable was on the very day Mrs. Paul Healy was to give a tea in her honor. The tea was given, and like Hamlet, with Hamlet left out, so was the luncheon for 20 which Mrs. William Alexander Yager gave on Wednesday at the Tombola.

Mrs. Frank O. Butler had an all-Chicago party the other day at her home in Via Bethesda, while Mrs. O. Nelson Tevander also entertained a group of Chicagoans with a luncheon on the terrace of the Everglades club golf house.

Palm Beach not only raised its Red Cross quota, but sent an additional $24,000 to national headquarters. Old files reveal that Palm Beach also was working for the Red Cross back in 1917. At that time a group of society women would assemble in the lounge of the old Breakers hotel. The slogan was "knit as fast as you talk." There were some who used the sewing machines donated from the hotel linen room, and during the hours of work the Breakers hotel orchestra would play softly. At the end of the afternoon tea and cake would be served.

It also is recalled here that an early worker for the Red Cross was Mrs. Harold Bryant, who had recently come to Florida with her late husband. Mrs. Bryant is now living in England, and has been for a number of years. She has endured many hardships due to war conditions, and her estate now boasts only one gardener, an Italian war prisoner who is buying English war bonds. Mrs. Bryant's son, A. Parker Bryant, is now serving overseas, and Mrs. Bryant, the former Betty Dixon of Chicago, is not only keeping up with friends socially but is operating a real estate business besides.

Mrs. Alice Littig Seims, Chicago sculptor, gave a small luncheon at the Bath and Tennis club during the week in honor of Dorothy Ross of Balmagowan castle, Scotland, who has recently come to Palm Beach for the remainder of the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Dechman and Ensign George Albert Eddy Jr. entertained the younger set with a cocktail party at the home of Mrs. Eddy Sr. on Tuesday. Ensign Eddy left the next day for Corpus Christi, Texas. Mr. Dechman also returned to Miami where he is engaged in war work.

Channing Hare, popular young artist who has divided his time between Palm Beach and Winter Park, has purchased a lot on Worth avenue and has declared he will build a studio home on his property after the war.

The largest event of St. Patrick's day was the cocktail party given by that popular cosmopolite, Mrs. O'Malley-Keyes, and which was attended by a number of the Chicago colony. Every guest responded to the hostess' request to wear something in Kelly green. Many of the men guests wore bright green shirts.

The beauteous Lili Damita has been seen often in Palm Beach this season. She is spending some time in Fort Lauderdale.

Richard Maylor, Russian tenor, gave a recital at the Everglades club on St. Patrick's day, while Margaret Sittig, violinist, is giving a recital there today, using a violin made in Cremona in 1696.

The Everglades club annual meeting resulted in the reëlection of its present officers: Hugh Dillman, president; Frederick Johnson, Maj. Barclay Warburton, and Charlton Yarnall, vice presidents. Daniel Dulany Hunter, executive secretary, is in Washington—war work. Added to the board of directors were Arthur Bradley-Campbell, Rufus W. Scott, and John H. Perry.

The personnel of the board of directors reads like a cross-section of Who's Who, The Financial Journal, and Blue Book. Among the members are: Frederick M. Alger, Detroit; Byron C. Foy, son-in-law of the late Walter P. Chrysler, New York; Joseph M. Cudahy, Chicago; Joseph E. Davies, Washington; Edward F. Hutton, New York; Peter A. B. Widener, Philadelphia; Lamont du Pont, Woolworth Dunahue, Grover Loening, Charles and Gurnee Munn, William Rhinelander Stewart, J. Leonard Replogle, Charles B. Wrightsman, Winston and Raymond Guest, and other well known figures.

The Palm Beach town council passed another of its celebrated ordinances the other day. This ordinance was adroitly drawn to cover a multitude of sins, which are not sins if committed in moderation. Up to a certain point you may, with impunity, do any of the following: Blow horns, blow whistles, keep animals, use vehicles in a noisy state of disrepair, play radios loudly from 11 p. m. to 7 a. m., make noises near churches, load and unload, hawk, and peddle.

But if in the performance of any of the foregoing you pass the point of moderation, then you are liable to a fine of $10 to $50, or a sentence of one to five days' free board and room in the resort's de luxe hoosegow.

Many people are just getting down to Palm Beach, and as yet there is no sign of the season's folding.

MARRIED FEB. 23

Mrs. William Gordon Sherwin is the former Anne Cameron Woodward, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Woodward of Kenwood avenue. Her marriage to Lieut. Mrs. Sherwin attended Chicago Teachers college and the Art institute. Lt. Sherwin, who is in the signal corps at Fort Monmouth, N. J., attended the University of Illinois.

Invitations sent to clubs grant members the privilege of bringing other guests.

Mrs. Henry A. Allen, the president, has mapped an ambitious program for the women's division this year, which includes the financing of an attractive rest room for the women workers, a pledge to pay the salary of occupational therapists, and the collection of discarded materials to be reconditioned or converted into new articles in the Goodwill shops.

Advertising Club Entries to Contest Sets Deadline for

Deadline date for entries for the Josephine Snapp award is Monday, April 5. Presented annually by the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago, to the woman in advertising who has distinguished herself with the most outstanding accomplishments in her profession, this is a national contest open to any advertising woman in the United States, whether or not she is a member of an advertising club. This award was started six years ago as a memorial to Josephine Snapp, former president of the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago, and among the former winners was one Chicagoan, Miss Virginia Porter.

Mrs. Consuela H. Miller, chairman of the award committee, advises that entries will be judged on "the basis of originality, soundness of plan, and accomplishment of objectives," and may consist of a complete advertising campaign, an advertising idea, a radio program, or any other feature which adds to the effectiveness and prestige of advertising.

Five nationally known advertising experts will act as judges.

A Chicago Shop Designs Smart Women's Styles

By Rea Seeger.

Walk thru the grilled iron doorway of one of Chicago's shops and you recapture your memories of Paris—Paris before the world upheaval, the city of fashions for women. For here in the heart of Chicago is a shop completely dedicated to fashions for appreciative clothes collectors, creations for the exacting woman. In the soft flattering beige interior are the fascinating lights and decor of a Parisian stronghold of fine silks, satins, flowers, ribbons, and exquisite materials that made the world famous shops of Paris the endless delight of all women.

Here, you can select the fabrics for your costumes from bolts of intriguing prints, soft luxurious crêpes, and satins; here you can be costumed from head to toe, flawlessly and individually. In this smart shop you can spend one hour or many, assembling a costume, or planning the myriad details of a single, perfect dress, adapting a neckline from one model, a sleeve from another, a waistline from a third. Or, you may choose from a dozen sketches, the dress or costume of your dreams. Hats, gloves, lingerie, and footgear can be blended or contrasted, all without leaving the room.

In spite of war time restrictions, fashions continue to serve not only as a morale sustaining comfort, but as an important industry to be cherished and encouraged so as not to perish. Fine workmanship, the genius of individualized design, the appreciation of beautiful materials, colors, and silhouette must be kept alive, by American women! In this shop you'll find the perfect collection, even tho the showing lacks the generous volume of other years of plenty.

This new season simply designed one piece dresses are star attractions. Deceptively simple models, to be sure, but these dresses always flatter, always harmonize with the demands of varying occasions, all thru the day. Dull black models are still perfect backgrounds for jewelry, for unusual colored accessories of gloves and bag or hat and gloves. Exquisite details, such as fine tucks, suave drapery, fine shirrings, and clever insets are only managed or evolved by experienced designers and makers.

The very simplicity of the dress marks it as the essence of dressmaking genius. These then are the dresses for the spring and summer days to come. Sleeves are short; necklines are effectively flattering and, for the most part, high and covered. Skirts are gracefully short and flaring, and waistlines are defined with narrow belts usually of the same material as the dress.

Costumes, consisting of printed silk dress and companion coat of thin wool lined with dress material, are still top choices of American women. Unusually beautiful combines of print and wool, the wool in street shades of navy, black, deep brown, gray, or beige, make the graciously fitted and designed long coats. The print dresses worn underneath are the same exquisitely simple dresses as the day time models described.

Bolero costumes are emphasized again this spring, boleros which are truly flattering, for only an expert can design the right length and the right snug fit for the individual shopper. If these boleros are to be smartly successful, they must be fitted and streamlined to each figure.

Four individually designed costumes are illustrated. All are available in a Chicago shop. Others may be ordered to dramatize the individual. Some are ready to wear. For further information, call Superior 0200.

Upper left . . . Bolero costume in caramel beige wool of pebbled texture consists of flattering one piece dress teamed with smart bolero jacket. Dress has flared skirt with umbrella tucks and modified shirt-waist bodice which buttons down front. • Upper right . . . Unusual daytime dress is made of black silk printed with an off-white design of young deer wearing magenta bows. Soft shirring at side front of skirt accents the narrow waistline. • Lower left . . . Simply cut, daytime dress of black silk has colorful, appliqued hollyhock floral on its gathered skirt. Soft bow ties at neck. • Lower right . . . Bolero costume combines colorful print with dull black wool. Blouse neckline is outlined with cut-out applique of printed pattern.

English Woman Tells Effect of War on Menus

By Mary Meade.

[Copyright: 1943: By The Chicago Tribune.]

I should like to introduce to readers today Mrs. George P. Swan, of London, England, who, I think, has something interesting to say to American women.

"Dear Mary Meade:

"This is a letter from an ordinary sort of Englishwoman. . . . A few days ago I saw a copy of your paper on a bookstall, and tho it was old, dated Nov. 18, I bought it. It looked so luxuriously thick, this alone fascinated me; then, too, I thought it would give me some first hand ideas of American opinion on various matters of world importance.

"Well, then, first your page in this huge paper. Economy Menu! It sounds to me like an Arabian nights' special party meal. Cranberry juice! Scrambled eggs! With bacon! Pears! Buttered parsnips! Creole flank steak an economy recipe! Olives, onion—do you know how difficult it is to make the lesser parts of beef palatable without a scrap of onion?

"Do not think I am a discontented, grumbling Englishwoman. Most of us are sure we are exceedingly blessed to have all we have. With reasonably good management, there is plenty and no one need be hungry. But we have no fruit whatever, except a few very small, stony prunes, for which we must surrender points. This has resulted in a great drain on our preserves, for which we have to allow a percentage of our points. Your present stage in the war seems to me to correspond with our first year, the so-called 'phony' war period. You cannot too strongly urge your women readers to work hard on any preserves, [canned goods] to store all they can—but not to grab and buy up things from the stores. This has the effect of robbing people of small means who can't afford to compete with those better off financially.

"With strict rationing of all foodstuffs, we find that the small families have greater difficulty in managing to eke out their rations than larger ones. Five people and over can do very well. We are far from starvation, but there is a terrible lack of variety in our food—and we know we face a period of greater shortage. Hence my warning to your women about all varieties of preserves. I do beg American women to be patriotic in a truly unselfish sense, to store sensibly, without being greedy.

"I shall keep your recipes, and even now can make a semblance, at least, of the brown sauce. Alas, we can almost never get a piece of suet or fat for puddings. However, if your food rations are managed as well as Lord Woolton has managed ours, you will have nothing to grumble about. I do not forget that we owe a great debt to the U. S. A. for our extras in food supply.

"I am 37 and have three sons, 16, 12, and 9½. The younger two still remain at school in the country, the eldest has been here with us thru all the terror in London. My husband is an inspector of aircraft under the air ministry. I work hard, too. I have organized and worked in a works canteen where bombers dived down on us hourly, day and night. One can get no help in the home, and we have not the labor saving devices you have.

"About your paper. Have you worked out how you will plan it if you are cut down to a single slim sheet, as all of our papers are? It seems to me that my paper, the News Chronicle, gives the reader an amazing amount of vital news and comment in its small space when compared with your thick TRIBUNE! But it is fascinating to see your unstinted ads. They make one pine to be smart again. Only a few women have the time [and they should not have it!] to do anything about appearances now. How soothing it would be to go to a beauty parlor—what an impossible luxury! So many of us need a complete rest.

"How lovely it would be to fly over to America for a brief spell, just to see the lights undimmed, and life and luxury still flowing! But not to stay—there is too much to do here, and we must all help to do it.

"It was grand when the American forces arrived here and swarmed the streets of our towns. It brought a warming feeling of comfort. We had had such a lonely feeling, and were up against such big odds. I hoped we might have two or three of the boys to live here with us and thus combine two functions, that of mothering and fathering boys away from their homes, and getting to know Americans. But I found that all the Americans were anxious to remain in Mayfair and would not move out of the center of London. I feel sure that a few of them anyway would really love this place. Our house is comfortable, charming, and quite unusual, tho sadly in need of paint. We rent it from an artist. This is old Hampstead, the oldest residential part of London. We have grand country air, and the center of town is only ¼ hour away.

"We are happy to have Americans in England. I hope that between us we shall do something about our erstwhile slip-shod running of world affairs. I feel, tho, that America has yet to learn to forget money. Money doesn't matter now—it mustn't matter!

"I should like to see your paper when you have made it an 'austerity' one!

"I have far too much to do to be writing all this. With best wishes from England,

"Sincerely yours,
"TERESA SWAN."

Quite a bit of solid comfort is to be found in a floor wax which has been developed by one of the large oil companies. . . . It is a wax which will not show water spots and is, moreover, very easy to apply since it does not need to be rubbed on. . . . Instead, you pour on a little of the wax at a time and use as applicator a long handled brush. . . . The wax dries in less than half an hour and you find yourself with a nice new finish which gleams brightly. . . . This wax can be used on composition and linoleum floors as well as on wood floors. . . . A wood floor must be sealed with one of the penetrating finishes, as the wax has a water base which would raise the wood grain.

The Stamp Collector

By Richard McP. Cabeen

Mr. Cabeen will answer questions about stamps, but not value. The column in this page contains offers to buy and sell. Include a stamped, self-addressed envelope for reply.

Air mail envelopes have been in such demand for use to and from the United States forces stationed abroad that the postal authorities have requested clerks to push the sale of air mail stamps for use with ordinary envelopes. At the same time experiments are being conducted with a view to providing a lightweight envelope for air mail use.

The entire envelope situation appears to have been caught in a snarl of the familiar red tape. A new series of envelopes which was pronounced ready almost a year ago has not appeared. While there is a shortage of air mail envelopes there is an abundance of certain other varieties and these are being overprinted with various "penalty clauses" by running the envelopes thru regular canceling machines equipped with special dies.

It has been explained that this is more economical that the purchase of plain envelopes with a printed "penalty clause." On the other hand there may be a shortage of envelopes for the official and departmental mail which is disgorged in a continuous torrent.

MUST YOUR DAUGHTER RISK HAPPY MARRIAGE ON HALF-TRUTHS?

Many a mother herself, reared in an atmosphere of false modesty, dreads the day when she must "tell her daughter." Too often, she fails to tell her at all. As a result, she learns "half-truths" from others. Little wonder so many young wives unknowingly risk their very happiness by placing their dependence on weak, ineffective "home-made" mixtures; or using over-strong solutions of acids for the douche which can actually burn, scar and even desensitize delicate tissue.

Today such risks are needless. Science has given womankind a safe—yet amazingly powerful liquid for the douche, Zonite. So powerful is Zonite that it kills immediately all germs and bacteria with which it comes in contact. Deodorizes—by actually destroying odors, leaving no tell-tale odor of its own. Protects personal daintiness. Yet! Zonite is non-caustic, non-poisonous, safe for delicate tissues. Over 20,000,000 bottles already bought. For modern hygienic protection you may never have known before, get Zonite at your druggist today.

Thru the Looking Glass

There is nothing quite like a skin freshener to remove the last smidge of cream from the face and pep up and revitalize the skin. It's one of the secrets to a bright, glowing complexion.

There is nothing quite like a mild astringent to give the skin a refreshed and alive sensation. It's well, however, to avoid the too strong fresheners and stick to something in the mild class. And falling into the latter category is a "toning milk" which boasts fresh milk as an ingredient. It's a delightfully scented, milky looking fluid that feels like balm on the skin.

There are several nice things such a product will do for the skin and foremost among them is the clean and fresh feeling it leaves in its wake. Cleansing creams are likely to leave a slightly sticky film on the face, no matter how assiduously cleansing tissues are used, and it takes a liquid such as this to remove the last vestige of grease. It's that last bit of cream which often harbors just enough soil to lay the foundation for blackheads and other blemishes, so that positive removal is a wise move.

Enlarged pores are like wrinkles: once they are established they can't be done away with, but they can be somewhat minimized and their increase retarded. The freshener has a good effect on the pores and a shiny nose will be much discouraged by its regular use.

It's a grand way to bring the complexion out of winter doldrums and give it a new glow. We're inclined to feel a sluggishnes in the skin at this time of the year and feel the need of something to stimulate and pep it up a bit.

A little pad of cotton is best used as an applicator for the lotion. Saturate a small pieces of it with the solution, squeeze out the excess liquid and gently remove any oil or grease from the face and neck. Use a fresh bit of cotton, moisten it lightly with freshener and pat briskly over the surface. Stroke and pat in an upward, lifting motion. Better observe that rule at all times in using any cream or lotion. A downward, pulling motion is apt to break down the tissues.

Home Owners' Queries

Elgin, Ill.—[To the Home Owners' Editor].—Is there any material that can be used to keep mirrors, eyeglasses, and windshields from fogging? —Harriet G.

Answer: Yes, there is a cream which serves such a purpose. This cream looks like a face cream and when applied to glass surfaces forms a protective coating. This coating acts to break up small particles of moisture as they strike, and helps keep them from clinging to the surface. If your department store does not carry this product send stamped, addressed envelope to this department for manufacturers' name and retail outlet.

Chicago.—[To the Home Owners' Editor].—How can you enrich and darken—just a little—the bricks of a library fireplace? —Matild F.

Answer: After you have cleaned bricks thoroly, apply a brush coat—and a soaking coat—of raw linseed oil. You will find the brickwork will be easier to keep clean after this treatment. It would be wise, however, to brush on a little in some corner of the fireplace first, to see how you like the effect.

Chicago.—[To the Home Owners' Editor].—How can we whiten soiled wood drainboards? —Samuel G.

Answer: Bleach with a saturated solution of oxalic acid. Be generous with the solution, and after it has stood overnight wash and rinse board well. Follow up with soaking coats of raw linseed oil, letting the oil remain on the board for an hour. You'll find the board won't take so easily to annoying stains after this treatment.

To Relieve Bad Cough, Mix This Recipe, at Home

Big Saving. No Cooking. So Easy.

You'll be surprised how quickly and easily you can relieve coughs due to colds, when you try this splendid recipe. It gives you about four times as much cough medicine for your money, and you'll find it truly wonderful.

Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until dissolved. No cooking needed—it's no trouble at all. (Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.) Then put 2½ ounces of Pinex (obtained from any druggist) into a pint bottle. Add your syrup and you have a full pint of medicine that will amaze you by its quick action. It never spoils, and tastes fine.

This simple mixture takes right hold of a cough. For real results, you've never seen anything better. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and eases the soreness.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its prompt action in coughs and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.

Bettina Bedwell Says:

Women who never before had anything to do with the business end of a sink now are learning to do some of their own housework, and millions of others who know all about household chores have jobs in war plants. Which may explain why first rate dress manufacturers have begun to design for the homemakers. And fresh, washable cottons are the stuff of which such dresses are made. In fact, these cool, versatile cottons are designed so they can be washed and ironed with ease, and they are colorful enough for street wear.

Clear, striped, checked, or plaid materials, as well as chambrays and seersuckers, are shown, all of which will stand the wear and tear of hard home work. There are many dresses featured which look like two piece affairs, with checked or striped waist and plain, one color skirt. Also shown is the pinafore with a bolero jacket which can be worn indoors or out. Blue denim coveralls suitable for working in a victory garden also are featured.

Lady of the House

March Twenty-First.

"I can but trust that good shall fall
At last—far off—at last, to all—
And every winter change to spring."

And here she is [officially at least], coming in with a full moon, and if you'll watch "where sits the wind" today, you can foretell the spring. If the wind is in the, south the prophets tell us, it will be a warm sprif; if in the north, the contrary. Maybe we better not look.

Were the Easter fixed so long ago by the Nicene decree as falling on the Sunday following the full moon coming upon or next after March 21, based on the calendar instead of the lunar month, next Sunday would be Easter. As it is, the Paschal full moon this year comes enough earlier [the 14th day of the moon] than the astronomical full moon to postpone Easter to the latest possible date, April 25. Only once in the last century [in 1886] did Easter come so late, and it will not again within this 20th century.

The chief reason for putting Easter at the time fixed by the Council of Nice seems to have been that the pilgrims needed moonlight to travel on their way to the great yearly festivities.

Errands.

I have so much to do before the dark;
Loveliness to gather from the sky;
All the blue, the clouds so white
And their soft wings in constant flight;
The song of birds that break that day,
And hush the hills to sleep at even;
Blue of far horizons, sunset's gold.
All these and more my heart would hold.
I have so much to do before the dark;
Lanterns of love to light and fire;
Promises to keep, life to share,
Deep things to seek, burdens to spare;
Joy to savor; songs to give away;
Friends to serve in my humble way.
I must hurry before the shadows fall,
Swift to heed the Master's call.

Impi Rinne.

Awakening.

Lying in bed I begin to ponder,
Gazing at an object yonder.
....With every nerve equiver,
I begin to shake and shiver—
Forebodings fill me with wonder.

Then as sleep steals from my eyes,
I slowly begin to realize,
That it's only my clock,
Whose hands point and mock,
Saying that it's time to arise.

And as wakefulness thru me flows,
I begin sipping into my clothes—
When suddenly it dawns on me
That I'm acting foolishly—
It's Sunday and I could've slept longer if I chose.

The worrd "no's" very simple,
And so is the word "yes,"
You wouldn't think that either
Could get you in a mess;
Now "maybe" is much safer—
At least it keeps folks guessing
When questions are too pointed
For a straight "no" or "yes'm."
But it's very odd my parents
Can only seem to find
Questions needing "yes" and "no,"
But none of the "maybe" kind.

Proper Shoes, Walking Habits Save the Feet

By Antoinette Donnelly.

[Copyright: 1943: By News Syndicate Co., Inc.]

How are those pedal extremities of yours holding up under the current strain?

Not so happily? Can't take the walking they're forced to do now? Well, it looks as if they were in for a long stretch of time-serving as the one dependable means of locomotion. So, something had better be done for and about them.

We asked the advisory aid of a famed podiatrist, a pioneer in this business of making feet usable for the purposes for which they were intended. He has been going up and down the land for years trying to make us aware of our shoe follies and of our reckless indifference to the fate of the feet inside them.

But we'll listen now—maybe! We'd better know a few truths:

"That walking with the feet turned out is Foot Enemy No. 1 and children made to do so are practically maimed from the start.

"That improper type of shoe is often the cause of poor posture.

"That the wearing of a proper type shoe and stocking [neither of them short or pointed toed] will relieve and, in most cases, remedy foot trouble.

"That a proper type of shoe should be low at the heel, broad at the toe, straight on the inside line and as flexible as the foot.

"That if you walk around in stocking feet, pigeon-toed, with toes turned up a few minutes every day you'll stretch muscles of the calf and relieve the strain met with on abrupt change from high to low heels.

"That walking up hill is done with ease if you stop before approaching hill, then take the incline slowly with feet turned in pigeon-toed and body leaning forward slightly.

According to Culbertson

By Ely Culbertson.

[Copyright: 1943: By Ely Culbertson.]

The usual complaint against kibitzers is that they criticize only after having looked at two hands, besides the dummy. Often, of course, this complaint is well founded, but equally often the declarer actually could have maneuvered in such a way as to make the opponents' hands virtually exposed.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 spade	Pass	1 no trump	2 hearts
3 diamonds	Pass	3 spades	Pass
4 spades	Pass	Pass	Pass

On the second round South was somewhat up against it for a perfect bid. Altho his hand was not worth an opening two bid, it was very powerful and South naturally wanted to impress North with that fact. Over East's two hearts, South was tempted to bid three spades, but since his spade suit was only five long, he reasoned that it would be wiser to bid a new suit at the three level, thereby at least inviting a "preference" from North. When North expressed that preference by going to three spades, South of course went to game in the major suit.

West opened the heart nine—obviously his top card in the suit. There was nothing to be gained by covering, so dummy ducked. East won with the ten, then continued with the king and ace. Declarer had to follow to the second round, but on the third had the small problem of whether to ruff. A moment's consideration revealed that there was no possible advantage in ruffing, since declarer had a losing club that might just as well be tossed on this trick. East then shifted to the club king, knocking out declarer's now blank ace. The spade ace was laid down, and the six was then led to the king. When West showed out, the finesse against the jack became established. Two more leads of trumps cleaned up this situation, and now nothing was left except to handle the diamond suit without loss.

Many players, I fear, would simply lead out the three top rounds, trusting to the drop of the jack, but in doing so they would deserve the inevitable result. At this point every declarer should know that the diamond suit could not break 3-3 [that it would be unlikely to break even 4-2] and consequently that the diamond jack did not figure to fall.

Let us consider: East has shown six hearts, four spades, and the club king. The latter card may have been a singleton, but it is more likely that East led it from the K-Q. At any rate, East cannot have more than two diamonds, therefore West is absolutely marked with four or more. The "percentage," then, enormously favors West's, holding the guarded jack. Since there is nothing to lose by laying down one top honor from the South hand [which may capture the singleton jack in the East hand], that is the proper play. But when South does this and gets nothing but the deuce from East, his next move must be to lead the diamond three, and when West plays low, to put in dummy's ten.

That is the way the hand was played and, of course, declarer was successful. The diamond ten holding, the queen, was cashed. Then a club was ruffed and declarer cashed his diamond king for the last trick.

Anna Stacey's Death a Shock to Art Colony

By Eleanor Jewett.

The sad news of Anna Lee Stacey's death in California will come as a shock to her many friends here. Mr. and Mrs. Stacey were members of the Tree Studio group of artists and may be counted among the most brilliant painters Chicago has produced. John F. Stacey painted landscapes; Anna Lee Stacey painted portraits, landscapes and beautiful still lifes. Both were staunch adherents to the traditions of good painting; both carried on an unrelenting fight upon the decadent and ugly qualities in modern art.

Mr. and Mrs. Stacey left Chicago a few years ago to settle in Pasadena. Mr. Stacey died there a little over a year ago. Mrs. Stacey was in splendid health and doing superb painting and for that reason her sudden death is the more sad. She hurt her foot slightly and then disobeyed her doctor who told her to keep off of it a few days. Instead of that she continued to be active and the foot became infected. The poison spread and in three days Mrs. Stacey was dead, a tragic and unnecessary death.

Anna Lee Stacey exhibited in many galleries and received many prizes and much praise. Both she and Mr. Stacey had many friends and many patrons. They were outstanding in any company. Mr. Stacey's quiet manner was in great contrast to his wife's quick tongue and shrewd humor, but neither was ever afraid to speak his mind. Many a good tilt was enjoyed between Mr. Harshe and Mr. Stacey at the Cliff Dwellers; many a pungent comment on paintings and painters made by Mrs. Stacey will be remembered.

The Tree Studio group, Lucie Hartrath, Anna Lynch, Albin Polasek, and the rest, will feel Mrs. Stacey's death deeply. Pauline Palmer is another member of that group whose death has not yet been forgotten. Somewhere a plaque should be put up in that building to the memory of these fine draftsmen for whom time has ceased to have meaning. Future exhibitions will lose by the absence of their work; those who visit future exhibits will have a less rich pleasure in store. Those three painters gave a great deal of beauty, strength and meaning to any show where their work hung.

The last painting of Anna Lee Stacey's to be seen here was shown recently at the Chicago Galleries, 215 North Michigan avenue. It is to be hoped that she will be represented in those same galleries in the April show of the Association of Chicago Painters and Sculptors and that later a memorial exhibit of her work may be seen, just as was arranged by Mr. Harry Engle, manager of the Chicago galleries, for Pauline Palmer.

One of the most attractive galleries it has been our good fortune to see is a new gallery, the Wawasee Art gallery at Syracuse, Ind. The gallery is only 120 miles from Chicago in a charming and hospitable little town. It is run by F. E. Marsh. At present there is an exhibit of oils, water colors and etchings which will continue to next December and a great deal of the work on view is decorative and extremely well done. Among the well known artists represented are Rudolph F. Ingerle, John Taylor Arms, Charles Longabaugh, and Antonin Sterba.

The most beautiful painting in the show is a study of "Onions" by E. Sophonisba Hergesheimer and the loveliest portrait is the graceful painting of a young woman by Edmund Brucker. Both these paintings are worth making the trip for and, in addition, there are some 60 other attractive, colorful, impetuous and decorative pictures. It is an exhibit not to be missed if you chance to be in the neighborhood. Syracuse is on a lake with several other lakes near by and hotels abound. For a pleasure drive [when A cards are out], we strongly recommend Syracuse, the Brown county beauty spot of its part of Indiana.

An unusual exhibition is that of water colors by Helene Warder Begg at the Chicago Academy of Sciences Museum of Natural History in Lincoln park at Clark street and Ogden avenue. Mrs. Beggs, a Plainfield artist, has painted mushrooms life size and the result is pictures which are as instructive as they are attractive. Mushrooms are very intriguing in color and size. They have an infinite variety. The danger which lurks in their neighborhood adds to their attraction, the forbidden fruit motif is always hard to resist.

There are, obviously, mushrooms which are good to eat. The academy exhibit points out the usefulness of certain species and also stresses the cautious selection necessary in utilizing this food source, as yet without its ration stamp!

Paintings of the sea by Alphonse J. Shelton make a stunning exhibit at the Ackermann Galleries, 408 South Michigan avenue, this month. In less restless mood are the exquisite "landscapes in needlework" by Mrs. Clytie Weaver, the widow of a Canadian naval officer, who only discovered her talent for this craft a few years ago. The landscapes are beautifully modulated; one marvels at the shift of colors in flowers, leaves and grasses. Marguerite Zorach has done something like this on a larger scale with needle and threads, but aside from that Mrs. Weaver is unique in her line. This is a particularly fascinating exhibit for all those who enjoy needlework.

Club to Give International Arts Program

Gay costumes to give national airs an added note of authenticity, folk dances and an art exhibit are embellishments calling for more than usual interest in an international program by the Organized Women Musicians, which is to be presented Thursday night in the hall at 175 West Washington street. Doors will be opened at 8 o'clock that evening to all persons interested, and there will be no admittance charge, the group, all professional musicians, has announced.

Appearing in Palestinian robes, Judith Dand will give a lecture on the religious music of Mohammedanism. Miss Dand formerly was a missionary in India.

Poland's representatives on the program will be Helen Ziokowski, who will sing and dance, and Helen Kole, who has arranged for and will comment upon an exhibit of Polish art. Miss Kole is president of the organization.

In their picturesque costumes with vivid embroideries and ribbons, the 30 members of the Ukrainian chorus and their director, Ann Hawryliw, will sing the distinctive music of "Little Russia." The gala evening is to be topped off with refreshments.

Another promising program in the fine arts category is that to be presented by Mrs. Edward L. Cornell Thursday in Fullerton hall of the Art institute for the annual drama day of the Conference of Club Presidents and Program Chairmen. James Bradley-Griffin and two members of his Uptown Players, Ethel Minns Lucas and Mardelle Schumann, are booked for a one act play, "Love Among the Lions," and Bess Sondell, drama critic and faculty member of the University of Chicago, will dramatize passages from Gorky's "The Lower Depths" and Saroyan's "Time of Your Life" in her "Drama of Life Goes On" lecture.

Another young artist performing for the conference Thursday will be Lois Gentile, the 18 year old miss who for two successive years has taken the Drama league scholarship for study with Rosa Raisa. Miss Gentile will sing a group of opera songs. The Normandie trio also will be heard. Its members are Gina Gaudio, violin; Arlene Walker, cello, and Trae Ehnborn, harp.

Mrs. Charles S. Clark, conference president, and Mrs. Cornell, who is drama chairman, have invited Mrs. William E. Vogelback, president of the Chicago Drama league, and Mrs. David C. Slagle, drama chairman for the Illinois Federation of Woman's clubs, to attend the meeting as special guests.

The Music Study Club of Chicago is presenting at its annual concert this afternoon in the Chicago room of the Hotel La Salle two of its young junior club members, Lydia V. Smutny, pianist, and Betty Jeffries, coloratura soprano. Miss Smutny was a member of the Chicago Piano Symphony orchestra that played last week in Orchestra hall.

Your perfume... and you

...something less than you, something more than you.
We see in Chantilly your look of serene brow,
the porcelain figurine, your cool and fragile blondeness.
If this is you, Houbigant's Chantilly is yours—satin-scented, faint with the sweet of full-blown pink roses. Wear it to say you, as only your perfume can, unforgettably—forever.
